(i) is carried out in coordination with the high-temperature superconductivity research and development activities of the Department of Energy (including the national laboratories of the Department of Energy), the National Science Foundation, the National Bureau of Standards, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration; and

(ii) complements rather than duplicates such activities.

(c) Technology Transfer to Private Sector.—(1) The Secretary of Defense, acting through the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, shall take appropriate action to ensure that high-temperature superconductivity technology resulting from the research activities of the Department of Defense is transferred to the private sector. (2) The Secretary of Energy, in consultation with the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, shall ensure that the national laboratories of the Department of Energy participate, to the maximum appropriate extent, in the transfer to the private sector of technology developed under the Department of Defense superconductivity program in the national laboratories.

SEC. 219. TRAINING IN ADVANCED MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGIES

(a) Funds for Purchase and Installation of Equipment.—Of the funds appropriated pursuant to section 201, not more than $31,000,000 ($25,000,000) of the amount appropriated for fiscal year 1988, and not more than $31,000,000 of the amount appropriated for fiscal year 1989, may be obligated for the purchase of high technology manufacturing equipment and the installation of such equipment in a private, nonprofit center for advanced technologies for the purpose of training, in a production facility, machine tool operators in skills critical to the defense technology base to build, operate, and maintain such equipment.

(b) Requirements.—Funds may not be obligated for the purpose described in subsection (a) until—

(1) the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, and the Secretary of Education enter into a memorandum of understanding concerning the participation of their respective departments in a project to demonstrate the training of machine technicians in a production facility;

(2) the Secretary of Defense approves the obligation of such funds for such purpose; and

(3) a period of 60 days elapses after the Secretary of Defense submits to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report that sets forth a detailed explanation of proposed Federal expenditures, a description of the cost-sharing arrangements between the Government agencies concerned and the private sector, and a description of how the proposed program furthers the industrial and technological goals of the Department of Defense.

SEC. 220. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON STRATEGIC MISSILE MODERNIZATION PROGRAMS

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) It is essential that the nation's defense priorities be carefully analyzed so as to properly fund the Armed Forces.

(2) The capabilities of the conventional forces of the United States and its allies will become more important if an agreement with respect to intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) is concluded between the United States and the Soviet Union.

(3) It is both desirable and possible to reduce the reliance of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization on nuclear weapons for the defense of all members of the alliance if the member nations of the alliance assert the political will to reduce such reliance and establish sound defense priorities.

(4) The United States is currently procuring and deploying one land-based intercontinental ballistic missile system (the MX system) at significant cost while developing another such system (the so-called Midgetman system) at significant additional cost.

(5) Efforts to reduce the Federal budget deficit, which are imperative for the economic well being of the United States, will continue for the foreseeable future to require limits on all discretionary Federal spending, including defense spending.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—In light of the findings in subsection (a), it is the sense of Congress that the authorization of funds in this Act for research and development for both the new small mobile intercontinental ballistic missile (commonly known as the "Midgetman" missile) and the proposed rail-mobile basing mode for the MX missile does not constitute a commitment or express an intent by Congress to provide funds to procure and deploy the Midgetman missile or to deploy any MX missiles in a rail-mobile basing mode or both.

PART C—STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE

Subpart 1—SDI Funding and Program Limitations and Requirements

SEC. 221. FISCAL YEAR 1988 FUNDING LEVEL FOR THE STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE

(b) SPECIFIED ACTIVITIES.—Of the funds available for the Strategic Defense Initiative program under subsection (a)—

(1) $27,000,000 shall be available only for a classified laser program;

(2) $15,000,000 shall be available only for medical applications of the free electron laser program for medical research and material; and

(3) $17,000,000 is available for defense-wide mission support for the Strategic Defense Initiative.

(c) DEFENSE-WIDE MISSION SUPPORT.—Of the amount appropriated for Defense Agencies for fiscal year 1987, $16,000,000 may be used for defense-wide mission support for the Strategic Defense Initiative.

SEC. 222. PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS WITH FOREIGN ENTITIES

(a) SDI CONTRACTS WITH FOREIGN ENTITIES.—Funds appropriated to or for the use of the Department of Defense may not be used for the purpose of entering into or carrying out any contract with a foreign government or a foreign firm if the contract provides for the conduct of research, development, test, or evaluation in connection with the Strategic Defense Initiative program.

(b) TEMPORARY SUSPENSION OF PROHIBITION UPON CERTIFICATION OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE.—The prohibition in subsection (a) shall not apply to a contract in any fiscal year if the Secretary of Defense certifies to Congress in writing at any time during such fiscal year that the research, development, testing, or evaluation to be performed under such contract cannot be competently performed by a United States firm at a price equal to or lesss than the price at which the research, development, testing, or evaluation would be performed by a foreign firm.

(c) EXCEPTIONS FOR CERTAIN CONTRACTS.—The prohibition in subsection (a) shall not apply to a contract awarded to a foreign government or foreign firm if—

(1) the contract is to be performed within the United States;

(2) the contract is exclusively for research, development, test, or evaluation in connection with antitactical ballistic missile systems; or

(3) that foreign government or foreign firm agrees to share a substantial portion of the total contract cost.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term "foreign firm" means a business entity owned or controlled by one or more foreign nationals or a business entity in which more than 50 percent of the stock is owned or controlled by one or more foreign nationals.

(2) The term "United States firm" means a business entity other than a foreign firm.

(e) TRANSITION.—The prohibition in subsection (a) shall not apply to a contract entered into before the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 223. LIMITATION ON TRANSFER OF SDI TECHNOLOGY TO SOVIET UNION

Military technology developed with funds appropriated or otherwise made available for the Strategic Defense Initiative may not be transferred, or made available for transfer, to the Soviet Union by the United States (or with the consent of the United States) unless—

(1) the President determines, and certifies to Congress, that the transfer is in the national interest of the United States and is to be made for the purpose of maintaining peace; and

(2) Congress approves that determination by a joint resolution.

SEC. 224. SDI ARCHITECTURE TO REQUIRE HUMAN DECISION MAKING

No agency of the Federal Government may plan for, fund, or otherwise support the development of command and control systems for strategic defense in the boost or post-boost phase against ballistic missile threats that would permit such strategic defenses to initiate the directing of damaging or lethal fire except by affirmative human decision at an appropriate level of authority.

SEC. 225. DEVELOPMENT AND TESTING OF ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE SYSTEMS OR COMPONENTS

(a) USE OF FUNDS.—(1) Funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1988, or otherwise made available to the Department of Defense from any funds appropriated for fiscal year 1988 or for any fiscal year before fiscal year 1988, shall be subject to the limitations prescribed in paragraph (2).

(2) The funds described in paragraph (1) may not be obligated or expended—

(A) for any development or testing of anti-ballistic missile systems or components except for development and testing consistent with the development and testing described in the April 1987 SDIO Report; or

(B) for the acquisition of any material or equipment (including any long lead materials, components, piece parts, test equipment, or any modified space launch vehicle) required or to be used for the development or testing of anti-ballistic missile systems or components, except for material or equipment required for development or testing consistent with the development and testing described in the April 1987 SDIO Report.

(3) The limitation under paragraph (2) shall not apply to funds transferred to or for the use of the Strategic Defense Initiative for fiscal year 1988 if the transfer is made in accordance with section 1201 of this Act and any comparable provision in legislation appropriating funds for military functions of the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1988.

(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term "April 1987 SDIO Report" means the report entitled "Report to Congress on the Strategic Defense Initiative", dated April 1987, prepared by the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization and submitted to certain committees of the Senate and House of Representatives pursuant to section 1102 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (Public Law 98-525; 10 U.S.C. 2431 note).

SEC. 226. PROHIBITION ON DEPLOYMENT OF ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE SYSTEM UNLESS AUTHORIZED BY LAW

The Secretary of Defense may not deploy any anti-ballistic missile system unless such deployment is specifically authorized by law after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 227. ESTABLISHMENT OF A FEDERALLY FUNDED RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT CENTER TO SUPPORT THE STRATEGIC DEFENSE INITIATIVE PROGRAM

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Department of Defense requires technical support for issues of system integration related to the Strategic Defense Initiative program.

(2) The Strategic Defense Initiative Organization, after assessing alternative types of organizations for the provision of such technical support to the Strategic Defense Initiative program (including Government organizations, profit and nonprofit entities (including existing federally funded research and development centers), a new division within an existing federally funded research and development center, a new federally funded research and development center, colleges and universities, and private nonprofit laboratories), determined that a new federally funded research and development center (hereinafter in this section referred to as an "FFRDC") would be the type of organization most appropriate for the provision of such technical support to the Strategic Defense Initiative program.

(3) In providing such technical support to the SDI program, the new FFRDC should provide critical evaluation and rigorous and objective analysis of technologies, systems, and architectures that are candidates for use in the SDI program.

(4) Competitive selection of a contractor to establish and operate such an FFRDC to support the Strategic Defense Initiative program is one way to enhance the prospects for independent and objective evaluation of system integration issues within the Strategic Defense Initiative program.

(b) AUTHORITY TO CONTRACT FOR FFRDC.—The Secretary of Defense, using funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for the Strategic Defense Initiative program, may enter into a contract to provide for the establishment and operation of a federally funded research and development center to provide independent and objective technical support to the Strategic Defense Initiative program. Such a contract may not be awarded before October 1, 1989.

(c) CONTRACT AWARD REQUIREMENTS.—(1) A contract under subsection (b) shall be awarded using competitive procedures which emphasize cost considerations.

(2) The Secretary of Defense shall solicit proposals for such contract from existing federally funded research and development centers, from universities, from commercial entities, and from appropriate new organizations and shall make maximum efforts to obtain more than one proposal for such contract.

(3) The Secretary shall submit the three best contract proposals (as determined by the Secretary), together with a copy of the proposed sponsoring agreement for the new FFRDC, for review by three persons designated by the Defense Science Board from a list of six or more persons submitted by the National Academy of Sciences. The persons performing the review—

(A) shall evaluate the extent to which each proposal and the proposed sponsoring agreement would foster competent and objective technical advice for the Strategic Defense Initiative Program; and

(B) shall report their evaluation of each such proposal and of the proposed sponsoring agreement to the Secretary.

(4) Before awarding a contract under subsection (b), and not sooner than March 30, 1989, the Secretary shall submit to Congress—

(A) a copy of the proposed final contract; and

(B) a copy of the proposed final sponsoring agreement relating to the operation of the new FFRDC.

(5)(A) The Secretary shall then withhold the award of such contract and the approval of such sponsoring agreement for a period of at least 30 days of continuous session of Congress beginning on the day after the date on which Congress receives the copies referred to in paragraph (4).

(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the continuity of a session of Congress is broken only by an adjournment sine die at the end of the second regular session of that Congress. In computing the 30-day period for such purposes, days on which either House of Congress is not in session because of an adjournment of more than three days to a day certain shall be excluded.

(d) REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO FFRDC.—The Secretary of Defense shall—

(1) require that the contract referred to in subsection (b) include a provision stating that no officer or employee of the Department of Defense shall have the authority to veto the employment of any person selected to serve as an officer or employee of the new FFRDC;

(2) require that at least 5 percent of the total amount of funds available for the new FFRDC shall be set aside for independent research to be performed by the staff of the new FFRDC under the direction of the chief executive officer of the new FFRDC;

(3) impose a limitation on the compensation payable to each senior executive of the new FFRDC for services performed for the new FFRDC so that such compensation shall be comparable to the amount of compensation payable to senior executives of comparable federally funded research and development centers for similar services;

(4) require that the new FFRDC publicly disclose the salary of its chief executive officer;

(5) prohibit current or former members of the Strategic Defense Initiative Advisory Committee from serving as members of the Board of Trustees of the FFRDC if such members constitute 10 or more percent of the Board of Trustees or from serving as officers of the new FFRDC;

(6) require that the contract referred to in subsection (b) include a provision prohibiting members of such Board of Trustees from serving as officers of the new FFRDC, except that a Board member may serve as the President of the new FFRDC if the Board is comprised of 10 or more members;

(7) require that the contract referred to in subsection (b) include a provision prohibiting the new FFRDC from employing any person who, as a Federal employee or member of the Armed Forces, served in the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization within two years before the date on which such person is to be employed by the new FFRDC; and

(8) require that any contract referred to in subsection (b) require that the Board of Trustees of the new FFRDC be comprised of individuals who represent a reasonable cross-section of views on the engineering and scientific issues associated with the Strategic Defense Initiative Program.

(e) FUNDING.—The Secretary of Defense shall provide that all funds for the new FFRDC within the Department of Defense budget for any fiscal year shall be separately identified and set forth in the budget presentation materials submitted to Congress for that fiscal year.

(f) SUNSET PROVISION.—No Federal funds may be provided to the new FFRDC after the end of the five-year period beginning on the date of the award of the first contract awarded to the FFRDC under this section.

Subpart 2—Report Requirements

SEC. 231. ANNUAL REPORT ON SDI PROGRAMS

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than March 15, 1988, and March 15, 1989, the Secretary of Defense shall transmit to Congress a report (in both an unclassified and a classified form) on the programs that constitute the Strategic Defense Initiative and on any other program relating to defense against ballistic missiles. Each such report shall include the following:

(1) A detailed description of each program or project included in the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) or which otherwise relates to defense against strategic ballistic missiles, including a technical evaluation of each such program or project and an assessment as to when each can be brought to the stage of full-scale engineering development (assuming funding as requested or programmed).

(5) A statement of the compliance of the planned SDI development and testing programs with existing arms control agreements, including the Antiballistic Missile Treaty.

(6) A review of possible countermeasures of the Soviet Union to specific SDI programs, an estimate of the time and cost required for the Soviet Union to develop each such countermeasure, and an evaluation of the adequacy of the SDI programs described in the report to respond to such countermeasures.

(7) Details regarding funding of programs and projects for the Strategic Defense Initiative, including—

(A) the level of funding provided for the current fiscal year and for previous fiscal years for each program and project in the Strategic Defense Initiative budgetary presentation materials provided to Congress;

(B) the amount requested to be appropriated for each such program and project for the next fiscal year;

(C) the amount programmed to be requested for each such program and project for the following fiscal year; and

(D) the amount required to reach the next significant milestone for each demonstration program and each major technology program.

(8) Details on what Strategic Defense Initiative technologies can be developed or deployed within the next 5 to 10 years to defend against significant military threats and help accomplish critical military missions. The missions to be considered include—

(A) defending elements of the Armed Forces abroad and United States allies against tactical ballistic missiles, particularly new and highly accurate Soviet shorter range ballistic missiles armed with conventional, chemical, or nuclear warheads;

(B) defending against an accidental launch of strategic ballistic missiles against the United States;

(C) defending against a limited but militarily effective Soviet attack aimed at disrupting the National Command Authority or other valuable military assets;

(D) providing sufficient warning and tracking information to defend or effectively evade possible Soviet attacks against military satellites, including those in high orbits;

(E) providing early warning and attack assessment information and the necessary survivable command, control, and communications to facilitate the use of United States military forces in defense against possible Soviet conventional or strategic attacks;

(F) providing protection of United States population from a Soviet nuclear attack; and

(G) any other significant near-term military mission that the application of SDI technologies might help to accomplish.

(9) For each of the near-term military missions listed in paragraph (8), the report shall include—

(A) a list of specific program elements of the Strategic Defense Initiative that are pertinent to these applications;

(B) the Secretary's estimate of the initial operating capability dates for the architectures or systems to accomplish such missions;

(C) the Secretary's estimate of the level of funding necessary for each program to reach those operating capability dates; and

(D) the Secretary's estimate of the survivability and cost effectiveness at the margin of such architectures or systems against current and projected Soviet threats.

(b) REPEALS.—Section 1102 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (10 U.S.C. 2431 note), and section 215 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661; 100 Stat. 3843) are repealed.

SEC. 232. REPORT ON SDI DEVELOPMENT PLANS AND COSTS

(a) REPORT REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the total cost to develop, produce, deploy, operate, and maintain the ballistic missile defense system that would incorporate the technologies approved by the Secretary of Defense in authorizing proceeding into the demonstration/validation phase of the acquisition process. Should this system not be sufficiently defined, the system described in the 1987 report entitled "Report of the Technical Panel on Missile Defense in the 1990s", prepared by the George C. Marshall Institute, should be used as a basis for determining cost.

(b) DEADLINE FOR REPORT; CLASSIFICATION.—The report under subsection (a) shall be submitted no later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act and shall be submitted in unclassified form.

SEC. 233. REPORT ON HOW ABSENCE OF THE ABM TREATY WOULD AFFECT STRATEGIC OFFENSIVE AND DEFENSIVE PROGRAMS

(a) REPORT ON NO ABM TREATY LIMITATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report concerning what the effect would be on strategic offensive and defensive programs of the United States if there were no limitations on strategic defensive systems in force under the 1972 ABM Treaty.

(b) MATTERS TO BE INCLUDED.—The report shall include the following:

(1) An analysis of the ramifications of there being no limitation in force under the 1972 ABM Treaty on development under the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) program of strategic defenses, including comprehensive strategic defense systems and more limited defenses designed to protect vital military and command and control assets of the United States.

(2) A comparison (based on the analysis made under paragraph (1)) of the research and development programs that could be pursued under the SDI program under the limitations applicable under the restrictive interpretation of the 1972 ABM Treaty, under the less restrictive interpretation of such treaty, and under a case in which there were no such limitations, including a comparative analysis of—

(A) the overall cost of such research and development programs;

(B) the schedule of such research and development programs; and

(C) the level of confidence attained in such research and development programs with respect to supporting a decision to commence full-scale engineering development under such programs in the early-to-mid 1990s.

(3) A list of options for the SDI program, assuming that there are no limitations in force under the 1972 ABM Treaty, that meet one or more of the following objectives:

(A) Reduction of overall development cost.

(B) Advancement of the schedule for making a decision to commence full-scale engineering development.

(C) Increase in the level of confidence in the results of the research by the original scheduled date for the commencement of full-scale development.

(4) An analysis of how rapidly, in the absence of limitations under the 1972 ABM Treaty, the Soviet Union could deploy a nationwide anti-ballistic missile defense of military and nonmilitary targets and the consequences of such a deployment. The analysis should include an assessment of the following:

(A) The effect of such deployment on the confidence of the United States that, should deterrence that depends increasingly on defensive forces fail, the planned strategic nuclear forces of the United States would be sufficient to hold assets that the leaders of the Soviet Union value at risk following a first strike by the Soviet Union against the United States.

(B) The changes that must be made to the strategic offensive forces of the United States to hold assets that the leaders of the Soviet Union value at risk in the presence of strategic defenses. The analysis should include both the cost of those changes and the time period scale over which they could be accomplished.

(C) The consistency of the required changes to United States strategic offensive forces of the United States described under subparagraph (B) with the current United States negotiating position in the Strategic Arms Reduction (START) negotiations.

(D) The degree to which crisis stability would be affected during the transition period between the appearance of nationwide anti-ballistic missile defenses by both the United States and the Soviet Union and the completion of the changes that the United States would make to its strategic offensive forces in response to such defenses by the Soviet Union.

(5) An analysis of the effect on deterrence of nuclear conflict if both the United States and Soviet Union deploy strategic defenses of comparable capability, considering both less capable and highly capable strategic defenses, as well as appropriate transition issues (including the effect on deterrence of the potential vulnerability of strategic defenses).

(c) DEADLINE FOR REPORT.—The report under subsection (a) shall be submitted not later than March 1, 1988.

(d) REPORT CLASSIFICATION.—The report under subsection (a) shall be submitted in both classified and unclassified versions.

(e) 1972 ABM TREATY DEFINED.—In this section, the term "1972 ABM Treaty" means the Treaty Between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missiles, signed at Moscow on May 26, 1972.

SEC. 234. REPORT ON ALLOCATION OF FY88 FUNDING

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services and on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the allocation of funds appropriated for the Strategic Defense Initiative for fiscal year 1988. The report shall set out the amount of such funds allocated for each program, project, or activity of the Strategic Defense Initiative within each appropriation account.

(b) DEADLINE FOR REPORT.—The report required by subsection (a) shall be submitted not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of legislation appropriating funds for the Strategic Defense Initiative for fiscal year 1988.

PART D—B-1B BOMBER PROGRAM

SEC. 241. FISCAL YEAR 1988 FUNDING LIMITATION

Of the funds appropriated pursuant to section 201 for fiscal year 1988, not more than $375,672,000 shall be available for research, development, test, and evaluation for the B-1B bomber program.

SEC. 242. DEFENSIVE AVIONICS TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR PROGRAM.—(1) During fiscal years 1988 and 1989, the Secretary of Defense shall develop and conduct a comprehensive program for the systematic testing of the defensive avionics system of the B-1B aircraft.

(2) Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the congressional defense committees a detailed plan for such testing during fiscal years 1988 and 1989. Such plan shall include—

(A) the planned test schedule for each of the various components of the defensive avionics system, tested singly and in combination with other components of the defensive and offensive avionics systems;

(B) the objectives of each of the planned tests and the criteria that will be used to determine whether each such test is successful, partially-successful, or unsuccessful; and

(C) how those scheduled tests can be used to estimate the capability of the B-1B to penetrate Soviet air defenses, including both single and multiple threats.

(b) LIMITATION ON OBLIGATION OF FUNDS.—If the report required under subsection (a)(2) is not submitted to the congressional defense committees by the deadline stated in that subsection for the submission of such report, then none of the funds referred to in section 241 may be expended for the B-1B bomber program until the report is received by those committees.

(c) BIMONTHLY STATUS REPORTS.—Beginning on February 1, 1988, and every two months thereafter until October 1, 1989, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on whether the tests scheduled during the period since the preceding report were carried out when and as planned, and whether each of those tests was successful, partially successful, or unsuccessful. Each such report shall address the capability of the B-1B aircraft to meet—

(1) performance objectives;

(2) technical and fiscal objectives; and

(3) significant milestones.

(d) CONGRESSIONAL DEFENSE COMMITTEES DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term "congressional defense committees" means the Committees on Armed Services and Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives.

SEC. 243. ASSESSMENT OF CAPABILITIES OF B-1B TO PENETRATE ENEMY AIR DEFENSES

(a) INDEPENDENT ASSESSMENT.—The Secretary of Defense shall provide for an independent assessment of the capabilities of the B-1B aircraft to penetrate air defenses of potential enemies. The Secretary shall appoint a panel of experts from the private sector to conduct the assessment and shall provide the panel such resources as are necessary, including technical assistance by private contractors, to assist the panel in conducting the assessment. Individuals appointed to the panel shall be independent of the Air Force and shall have no arrangements with the Air Force that would constitute a conflict of interest.

(b) CONFIGURATIONS TO BE CONSIDERED.—The panel shall estimate the air defense penetration capabilities of the B-1B aircraft in all of its mission profiles as the aircraft is estimated to be configured at each of the following times:

(1) Initial operational capability.

(2) The time the assessment is conducted.

(3) The completion of the developmental test and evaluation/initial operational test and evaluation period during fiscal year 1989.

(4) The completion of the baseline modifications program during fiscal year 1991.

(c) THREATS TO BE CONSIDERED.—The panel shall estimate the air defense penetration capabilities of the B-1B aircraft against the threats described—

(1) in the 1981 joint Office of the Secretary of Defense/Air Force Bomber Alternatives Study;

"(B) shall be paid for the balance of such amount subject to the availability of appropriations and in accordance with an amortization schedule determined by the Secretary concerned and the contractor through negotiations.

"(3) The percentage to be used under paragraph (2)(A) shall be specified in the contract based upon negotiations between the Secretary concerned and the contractor and may not be less than 50 percent, except that a lower percentage may be specified in the case of any contract if the Secretary concerned, before the contract is entered into, approves the use of that lower percentage with respect to that contract. Any such approval by the Secretary concerned shall be made under criteria established by the Secretary of Defense, acting through the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition.

"(4) A requirement that a contract described in subsection (b) include provisions, determined on the basis of negotiations between the Secretary concerned and the contractor, which ensure that if the contract, or the program with respect to which such contract is awarded, is terminated before the maximum amount specified under paragraph (1) has been paid to the contractor, and the termination is not for a reason that reflects a failure of the contractor to perform the contract, the Secretary concerned, subject to the availability of appropriations, shall pay the contractor the balance of such maximum amount in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract.

"(5) A requirement that, except as provided in paragraph (2), a contractor under a contract described in subsection (b) shall be paid for the special production tooling or special production test equipment that the contractor was required to acquire or fabricate for performance under the contract in the maximum amount provided in the contract and in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract.

"(d) Costs incurred by a contractor under a contract described in subsection (b) for the acquisition and fabrication of production special tooling and production special test equipment for which reimbursement is made under this section shall be considered to be direct costs incurred by the contractor.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"2329. Production special tooling and production special test equipment: contract terms and conditions.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Section 2329 of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a), shall apply with respect to contracts entered into pursuant to solicitations issued after the end of the 120-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(a) VEHICLES FOR USE INSIDE THE UNITED STATES.—Neither the Secretary of Defense nor the Secretary of a military department may enter into a contract during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on September 30, 1989, for the procurement of administrative motor vehicles that are manufactured in a country other than the United States or Canada and are for use inside the United States unless the type of motor vehicle proposed to be procured is not available in sufficient and reasonably available quantities and satisfactory quality from a manufacturer in the United States or Canada.

(b) VEHICLES FOR USE OVERSEAS.—(1) Neither the Secretary of Defense nor the Secretary of a military department may enter into a contract during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on September 30, 1989, for the procurement of administrative motor vehicles that are manufactured in a country other than the United States or Canada and are for use outside the United States (other than motor vehicles intended for use in security, intelligence, and criminal investigative operations) unless firms which manufacture similar vehicles in the United States or Canada are afforded a fair opportunity to compete for the contract.

(2) In awarding any contract subject to paragraph (1), the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the military department concerned may take into consideration the cost and availability of maintenance and other logistic services and supplies required for the operation of such vehicles.

(c) EXCEPTIONS.—This section shall not apply to the procurement of administrative motor vehicles in the case of a contract—

(1) for an amount less than $50,000; or

(2) that is specifically authorized by law.

(d) APPLICABILITY.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2)(B), subsection (b) shall not apply in the case of a contract authorized or required to be entered into as provided under the terms of a country-to-country agreement for the support of United States Armed Forces in Europe if the agreement is in existence on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2)(A) After the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense may not enter into a country-to-country agreement for the support of United States Armed Forces in Europe that is inconsistent with the limitations on the procurement of administrative motor vehicles under this section applicable during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on September 30, 1989.

(B) If an agreement described in paragraph (1) is renewed or extended after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall ensure that such agreement, as renewed or extended, is not inconsistent with the limitations on the procurement of administrative motor vehicles under this section applicable during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on September 30, 1989.

SEC. 824. PROCUREMENT OF MANUAL TYPEWRITERS FROM WARSAW PACT COUNTRIES

(a) MOST-FAVORED-NATION COUNTRIES.—Section 2400 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by section 124, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(c) MANUAL TYPEWRITERS FROM WARSAW PACT COUNTRIES.—Funds appropriated to or for the use of the Department of Defense may not be used for the procurement of manual typewriters which contain one or more components manufactured in a country which is a member of the Warsaw Pact unless the products of that country are accorded nondiscriminatory treatment (most-favored-nation treatment).".

(b) CONFORMING REPEAL.—Section 1262 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1984 (Public Law 98-94; 97 Stat. 703), is repealed.

SEC. 825. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON PREPARATION OF CERTAIN ECONOMIC IMPACT AND EMPLOYMENT INFORMATION CONCERNING NEW ACQUISITION PROGRAMS

It is the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Defense should not, before an acquisition program is approved to proceed into full-scale development, prepare any material, report, list, or analysis with respect to economic benefits or the employment impact of that program in a particular State or congressional district.

TITLE IX—MATTERS RELATING TO ARMS CONTROL

SEC. 901. MISSILE TECHNOLOGY CONTROL REGIME

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the proliferation of nuclear weapons and of missiles capable of the delivery of nuclear weapons is a threat to international peace and security;

(2) in the early 1980's, the danger of the proliferation of such weapons and missiles was formally recognized in discussions among the governments of the United States, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, and the United Kingdom; and

(3) these seven governments, after four years of negotiations, on April 7, 1987, concluded an agreement known as the Missile Technology Control Regime, for the purpose of limiting the proliferation of missiles capable of the delivery of nuclear weapons (and hardware and technology related to such missiles) throughout the world.

(b) EXPRESSIONS OF CONGRESS.—The Congress—

(1) expresses its firm support for the Missile Technology Control Regime as a means of enhancing international peace and security;

(2) expresses its strong hope that all nations of the world will adhere to the Guidelines of the Missile Technology Control Regime; and

(3) expresses its expectation that all relevant agencies of the United States Government will ensure the fully effective implementation of this regime.

(c) REPORT ON MANPOWER REQUIRED TO IMPLEMENT THE MISSILE TECHNOLOGY CONTROL REGIME.—(1) Not later than February 1, 1988, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report—

(A) identifying the functional responsibilities of the Department of Defense for implementing the Missile Technology Control Regime;

(B) describing the number and skills of personnel currently available in the Department of Defense to perform these functions; and

(C) assessing the adequacy of these resources for the effective performance of these responsibilities.

(2) The report required by paragraph (1) shall identify the total number of current Department of Defense full-time employees or military personnel and the grades of such personnel and the special knowledge, experience, and expertise of such personnel, required to carry out each of the following responsibilities of the Department under the regime:

(A) Review of private-sector export license applications and government-to-government cooperative activities.

(B) Intelligence analysis and activities.

(C) Policy coordination.

(D) International liaison activity.

(E) Enforcement and technology security operations.

(F) Technical review.

(3) The report shall include the Secretary's assessment of the adequacy of staffing in each of the categories specified in subparagraphs (A) through (F) of paragraph (2) and shall make recommendations concerning measures, including legislation if necessary, to eliminate any identified staffing deficiencies and to improve interagency coordination with respect to the regime.

SEC. 902. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON THE KRASNOYARSK RADAR

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty prohibits each party to the Treaty from deploying ballistic missile early warning radars except at locations along the periphery of its national territory and oriented outward.

(2) The 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty prohibits each party to the Treaty from deploying an anti-ballistic missile system to defend its national territory and from providing a base for any such nationwide defense.

(3) Large phased-array radars were recognized during negotiation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty as the critical long lead-time element of a nationwide defense against ballistic missiles.

(4) In 1983 the United States discovered the construction, in the interior of the Soviet Union near the town of Krasnoyarsk, of a large phased-array radar that has subsequently been judged to be for ballistic missile early warning and tracking.

(5) The Krasnoyarsk radar is more than 700 kilometers from the Soviet-Mongolian border and is not directed outward but instead, faces the northeast Soviet border more than 4,500 kilometers away.

(6) The Krasnoyarsk radar is identical to other Soviet ballistic missile early warning radars and is ideally situated to fill the gap that would otherwise exist in a nationwide Soviet ballistic missile early warning radar network.

(7) The President has certified that the Krasnoyarsk radar is an unequivocal violation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Soviet Union is in violation of its legal obligation under the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

SEC. 903. REPORT ON COMPLIANCE BY THE SOVIET UNION WITH THRESHOLD TEST BAN TREATY

(a) In General.—The President shall submit to Congress, not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, a report discussing the use of the current official United States method of estimating the yield of Soviet underground nuclear tests to determine the extent to which the Soviet Union is complying with the 150 kiloton limit on underground nuclear tests contained in the Threshold Test Ban Treaty.

(b) Form and Content of Report.—The report shall be submitted in both classified form and (if possible) unclassified form and shall include the following matters:

(1) A discussion of whether past assessments made by the United States of the extent of Soviet compliance with the 150 kiloton limit contained in the Threshold Test Ban Treaty would have been different if the United States, in making those assessments, had used the current official United States method of estimating the yield of underground nuclear tests conducted by the Soviet Union.

(2) The number of nuclear tests conducted by the Soviet Union after March 31, 1976, that have a central value exceeding 150 kilotons yield (estimated on the basis of the current official method used by the United States in estimating underground nuclear test yields), the central value of those tests (estimated on such basis), and the dates on which those tests were conducted.

(3) The number, dates, and estimated central values of tests, if any, conducted by the United States after March 31, 1976, which, if measured on the basis of the current official method used by the United States in estimating Soviet underground nuclear test yields (taking into account the differences between the United States and Soviet test sites), would have an indicated central value exceeding 150 kilotons yield.

(4) The number of tests conducted by the United States after March 31, 1976, if any, which actually had yields exceeding 150 kilotons, the estimated central value of each such test, and the date on which each such test was conducted.

(5) A description of all nuclear testing activities of the Soviet Union which the President has found to be likely violations of the legal obligations under the Threshold Test Ban Treaty, the dates on which those activities took place, and the specific legal obligations under the Threshold Test Ban Treaty likely to have been violated by the Soviet Union in conducting such activities.

(6) A discussion of whether and, if so, the extent to which, the President, in arriving at his finding that several nuclear tests conducted by the Soviet Union constituted a likely violation of legal obligations under the Threshold Test Ban Treaty, considered the mutual agreement contained in the Threshold Test Ban Treaty which permits one or two minor, unintended breaches of the 150 kiloton limit per year to be considered nonviolations of the Treaty.

(7) A detailed comparison of the current official method used by the United States Government in estimating Soviet underground nuclear test yields with the method replaced by the current method, and the date on which the current official method was adopted by the United States.

SEC. 904. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND DECLARATIONS CONCERNING ARMS CONTROL NEGOTIATIONS

(a) Congressional Findings.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States and the Soviet Union are currently engaged in negotiations to conclude a treaty on intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) and are continuing serious negotiations on other issues of vital importance to the national security of the United States.

(2) The current negotiations, which reflect delicate compromises on both sides, are a culmination of years of detailed and complex negotiations in which the negotiators for the United States have been pursuing a policy consistently advocated by the past two Presidents regarding nuclear arms control in the European theater.

(3) While recognizing fully that the President, under clause 2, section 2, article II of the Constitution, has the power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, the Congress also recognizes the special responsibility conferred by the Founding Fathers on the Senate in requiring that it give its advice and consent before a treaty may be ratified by the United States and that in carrying out this responsibility the Senate is accountable to the people of the United States and has a duty to ensure that no treaty is ratified which would be detrimental to the welfare and security of the United States.

(4) In recognition of this responsibility, the Senate has established a special continuing oversight body, the Arms Control Observer Group, which over the last two and one-half years has functioned to provide advice and counsel to the President and his negotiators, when appropriate, on a continuing basis during the course of the negotiations to achieve an INF treaty.

(5) The Senate and the President both have a role under the Constitution in the making of treaties and Congress as a whole has a role under the Constitution in the regulating of expenditures, including expenditures for weapons systems that may be the subject of treaty negotiations.

(b) Congressional Declarations.—In light of the findings in subsection (a), Congress—

(1) fully supports the efforts of the President to negotiate stabilizing, equitable, and verifiable arms reduction treaties with the Soviet Union;

(2) endorses the principle of mutuality and reciprocity in arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union and cautions that neither the Congress nor the President should take actions which are unilateral concessions to the Soviet Union; and

(3) urges the President to take care that no provision is agreed to in those negotiations that would be harmful to the security of the United States or its allies and friends.

(c) Declaration of the Senate.—The Senate declares that it will reserve judgment regarding the approval of any arms control treaty until it has conducted a thorough examination of the provisions of the treaty and has assured itself that those provisions—

(1) are effectively verifiable; and

(2) serve to enhance the strength and security of the United States and its allies and friends.

SEC. 905. REPORT ON MILITARY CONSEQUENCES OF THE ELIMINATION OF BALLISTIC MISSILES

(a) Report Requirement.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report examining the military consequences of any arms control agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union that would provide for the elimination of all strategic ballistic missiles of the United States and the Soviet Union.

(b) Matters To Be Discussed.—Such report shall be submitted in both classified and unclassified form and shall include a discussion of the strategic, budgetary, and force structure implications of an agreement described in subsection (a) for—

(1) conventional defenses of the United States and its allies in Europe, the Far East, and other regions vital to the national security of the United States;

(2) tactical nuclear deterrence by the United States in those regions;

(3) strategic offensive retaliatory systems of the United States that would not be affected by such an agreement, including bomber forces and cruise missiles;

(4) air defenses of the United States needed to counter bomber forces and cruise missiles of the Soviet Union;

(5) Strategic Defense Initiative programs designed to provide possible defenses against strategic ballistic missiles; and

(6) any new programs which the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff may consider necessary in order for the United States to protect its national security interests in light of the relative advantage conferred by such an agreement on other nations possessing nuclear weapons whose strategic ballistic missile forces would not be affected by the agreement.

SEC. 906. REPORT ON IMPLICATIONS OF CERTAIN ARMS CONTROL POSITIONS

Not later than June 30, 1988, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report, in both classified and unclassified versions, containing the following:

(1) A description of the quantitative and qualitative implications for the strategic modernization program of the United States of the publicly-announced position of the United States at the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks in Geneva, giving special, but not exclusive, attention to the implications of such position for the Trident SSBN program, the rail-garrison Peacekeeper program, and the small intercontinental ballistic missile ("Midgetman") program.

(2) A description of the advantages and drawbacks of following the recommendations made in 1983 in the report of the President's Commission on Strategic Forces with regard to research on smaller ballistic-missile carrying submarines, each carrying fewer missiles than the Trident, as a potential follow-on to the Trident submarine force.

(3) The recommendations of the Secretary of Defense with regard to paragraphs (1) and (2) on United States force modernization policy and arms control policy.

SEC. 907. SUPPORT FOR NUCLEAR RISK REDUCTION CENTERS

(a) Congress applauds the recent signing of an agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union on the establishment of nuclear risk reduction centers. Congress regards this agreement as an important and practical first step in reducing the threat of nuclear war due to accident, misinterpretation, or miscalculation. Congress notes that the agreement calls for centers to be established in each nation's respective capital for the routine exchange of information and advanced notification of nuclear and missile testing.

(b) It is the hope of Congress that this first step in nuclear risk reduction will increase the confidence and mutual trust of both parties to the agreement and lead to an expansion in functions to reduce further the chances of accidental war. Such functions may include joint discussions on crisis prevention and the development of strategies to deal with incidents or threats of nuclear terrorism, nuclear proliferation, or other mutually agreed upon issues of concern in reducing nuclear risk.

TITLE X—MATTERS RELATING TO NATO COUNTRIES AND OTHER ALLIES

Part A—NATO Deterrence

SEC. 1001. REPORT ON REQUIREMENTS FOR MAINTAINING NATO'S STRATEGY OF DETERRENCE

(a) Requirement.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report regarding the ability of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) to maintain its strategy of deterrence through the 1990s. The report shall include a specific discussion of the implications for such deterrence if the United States and the Soviet Union agree to a treaty which requires the elimination of all intermediate-range nuclear force (INF) missiles having a range between 500 and 5,500 kilometers. The report shall be prepared in consultation with the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

(b) Form and Content of Report.—The Secretary shall submit the report required by subsection (a) in both classified and unclassified forms and shall include in the report the following:

(1) A discussion of the effect that the elimination under an INF treaty of intermediate range missiles deployed by the United States and the Soviet Union would likely have on the ability of NATO to maintain an effective flexible response strategy and credible deterrence.

(2) The appropriate numbers and types of nuclear weapons and nuclear-capable delivery systems of the United States not limited by the proposed INF treaty which the Secretary of Defense recommends for deployment in or redeployment to the European theater if an INF treaty is ratified and enters into force, including a description of any nuclear modernization program the Secretary has recommended or proposes to recommend as necessary to ensure that NATO will be able to maintain a credible and effective military strategy.

(3) A discussion of the balance between the nonnuclear forces of NATO and the Warsaw Pact in the European theater, the likelihood of NATO making significant improvements in that balance over the next few years, the potential effect of conventional force balance alternatives currently under consideration by the United States Government, and the likelihood and potential effect of a new agreement between NATO and the Warsaw Pact limiting nonnuclear forces on that balance.

(4) A discussion of the feasibility and cost effectiveness of substituting advanced conventional munitions for nuclear weapons currently deployed by NATO, including a discussion of the costs of such weapons and prospects for sharing such costs among NATO allies.

(5) A description of nonnuclear forces that would be needed to support the operational concept of Follow-on Forces Attack (FOFA).

(6) The status of improvements being made in the air defenses of NATO in Europe.

(7) A discussion of the views of the leaders of member nations of NATO (other than the United States) and of the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe (SACEUR), on the matters described in paragraphs (1) through (5).

(c) Deadline of Report.—The report required by subsection (a) shall be submitted not later than the earlier of—

(1) 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) the date on which the President submits to the Senate for its advice and consent a treaty described in subsection (a).

SEC. 1002. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON LEVEL OF UNITED STATES FORCES PERMANENTLY STATIONED IN EUROPE IN SUPPORT OF NATO

(a) Findings.—The Congress makes the following findings with respect to the level of United States military forces permanently stationed in Europe:

(1) The agreement in principle between the United States and the Soviet Union to eliminate all intermediate-range nuclear missiles (INF) has important implications for the defense posture of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization alliance.

(2) The presence of United States forces in Europe constitutes the most visible and meaningful evidence of the continuing strong commitment of the United States to the integrity of the alliance.

(3) NATO Defense Ministers stated in May 1987 that the "continued presence of United States forces at existing levels in Europe plays an irreplaceable role in the defense of North America as well as Europe".

(b) Sense of Congress.—(1) In light of the findings in subsection (a), it is the sense of Congress that—

(A) the stationing in Europe of United States military forces in support of NATO at the level of military personnel permanently stationed in Europe in support of NATO on the date of the enactment of this Act plays an indispensable role for peace and deterrence; and

(B) the commitment of United States forces should be continued at that level (assuming all existing basing agreements remain in effect).

(2) It is further the sense of Congress that it would not be inconsistent with the sense of Congress expressed in paragraph (1) if the actual number of United States military personnel permanently stationed in Europe in support of NATO at any time falls below the level of such personnel on the date of the enactment of this Act because of administrative fluctuations or if such level is reduced following a determination by the President that national security considerations require such a reduction.

SEC. 1003. STUDY OF FUTURE OF NATO

The Secretary of Defense shall contribute, from funds appropriated for fiscal year 1988 for operation and maintenance of Defense Agencies, the amount of $50,000 to the North Atlantic Assembly for a study on the future of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Part B—Burden Sharing

SEC. 1011. STUDY OF DEFENSE EXPENDITURES IN JAPAN

(a) In General.—The Secretary of Defense shall conduct a study of the ways in which the United States may further its national security interests in the Far East.

(b) Report.—Within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall transmit to Congress a report on such study. The report shall contain—

(1) the plans of the Department of Defense in the current five-year defense plan for defense expenditures for each fiscal year covered by the plan to be made in support of United States security interests in the Far East and, of such planned expenditures in each such fiscal year, how much is attributable to projected increases in defense outlays for that fiscal year;

(2) the projections for national defense expenditures by Japan for each such fiscal year;

(3) the projections for national defense expenditures by the United States directly in support of United States forces, facilities, and equipment stationed or located in Japan for each such fiscal year; and

(4) the projections for national defense expenditures by Japan directly in support of United States forces stationed in Japan for each such fiscal year.

SEC. 1012. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING JAPAN'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO GLOBAL STABILITY

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The alliance of the United States and Japan is the foundation for the security of Japan and peace in the Far East and is a major contributing factor to the democratic freedoms and economic prosperity enjoyed by both the United States and Japan.

(2) Threats to the security of both the United States and Japan have increased significantly since 1976, principally as the result of—

(A) the occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union;

(B) the continued expansion and buildup of military forces of the Soviet Union (particularly the expansionist efforts by the Soviet Union in the South Pacific and the buildup of the Soviet Pacific fleet);

(C) the occupation of Cambodia by Vietnam; and

(D) instability in the Persian Gulf region (from which Japan receives 60 percent of its petroleum and one-third of its total energy requirements).

(3) In keeping with the declaration made at the 1983 meeting in Williamsburg, Virginia, of the leaders of the leading industrialized democracies that "the security of our countries is indivisible and must be approached on a global basis", the government of Japan—

(A) has raised its defense spending by an average of 5 percent per year since 1981;

(B) has rescinded a limit on annual expenditures for defense of 1 percent of the gross national product of Japan; and

(C) is fulfilling the pledge of Prime Minister Suzuki to defend the territory, airspace, and sea lanes of Japan to a distance of 1,000 miles by 1990.

(4) While recognizing and applauding the actions by the government of Japan referred to in paragraph (3), Congress notes that Japan has the second largest gross national product in the world, is a major creditor nation, and has a large private savings rate, but nevertheless lags far behind other industrialized democracies in terms of the percentage of its gross national product that it spends for national defense and programs to promote global security and stability.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the United States would welcome an initiative by Japan to assume a politically acceptable and significant global security role consistent with its economic status by taking the following actions:

(1) Increasing spending for its Official Development Assistance program and its defense programs so that, by 1992, the level of spending by Japan on those programs (stated as a percentage of gross national product) will approximate the average of the levels of spending by the member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization on official development assistance and defense programs (stated as a percentage of their respective gross national products).

(2) Devoting increased spending for its Official Development Assistance program primarily to the Republic of the Philippines and regions of importance to global stability outside of East Asia, particularly Oceania, Latin America, and the Caribbean and Mediterranean nations.

(3) Devoting any increase in spending for that program primarily to concessional, untied grants and increasing the portion of total expenditures made for that program for those multilateral financial institutions of which Japan is a member.

(4) Designating those nations that are to be recipients of increased development assistance as described in paragraphs (1) through (3) through consultation with its security partners.

(5) Completing its five-year defense program for fiscal years 1986 through 1990 and, at the earliest possible date after the completion of that program, further enhancing the fulfillment of the pledge of Prime Minister Suzuki referred to in subsection (a)(3).

PART C—PROCUREMENT MATTERS

SEC. 1021. OVERSEAS WORKLOAD PROGRAM

(a) IN GENERAL.—A firm of any member nation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) or of any major non-NATO ally shall be eligible to bid on any contract for the maintenance, repair, or overhaul of equipment of the Department of Defense to be awarded under competitive procedures as part of the program of the Department of Defense known as the Overseas Workload Program.

(b) SITE FOR PERFORMANCE OF WORK.—A contract awarded during fiscal year 1988 or 1989 to a firm described in subsection (a) may be performed in the theater in which the equipment is normally located or in the country in which the firm is located.

(c) EXCEPTIONS.—The Secretary of a military department may restrict the geographic region in which a contract referred to in subsection (a) may be performed if the Secretary determines that performance of the contract outside that specific region—

(1) could adversely affect the military preparedness of the Armed Forces of the United States; or

(2) would violate the terms of an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

(d) REPORT REQUIREMENT.—(1) Not later than December 1, 1988, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on the nature of the maintenance, repair, and overhaul work of the Department of Defense performed under the program of the Department of Defense known as the Overseas Workload Program.

(2) The report shall include the following:

(A) A description of the categories of work performed under that program and the costs associated with those categories of work.

(B) A description of the capabilities of facilities that United States firms have established in Europe to perform work under that program.

(C) A description of the capabilities to perform work under that program by firms in the United States, Canada, and countries that are major non-NATO allies of the United States.

(D) A description of the maintenance, repair, and overhaul work under that program that could be performed in the United States or Canada, or in a country that is a major non-NATO ally, on a cost-effective basis and without a significant adverse effect on the readiness of the Armed Forces of the United States.

(E) A list and detailed explanation of each of the instances, through October 31, 1988, in which the Secretary of a military department exercised the authority provided in subsection (c).

(e) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term "major non-NATO ally" has the meaning given that term by section 1105(g)(1) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661).

SEC. 1022. NATO COOPERATIVE PROJECT AGREEMENTS

Clause (C) of section 27(b)(1) of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2767(b)(1)(C)) is amended by inserting "or for procurement by the United States of munitions from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or a subsidiary of such organization" after "member country".

SEC. 1023. REPORT ON CO-PRODUCTION OR CO-ASSEMBLY OF M1A1 TANK

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a detailed report on any plans of the Department of Defense as of the time of the submission of the report regarding co-production or co-assembly of the M1 or M1A1 Abrams tank with a foreign country. The Secretary shall include in such report the following:

(1) The status of any current negotiations by the Secretary of Defense with any foreign country regarding the co-production or co-assembly of the M1 or M1A1 tank by the United States and that country.

"(e)(1) The Secretary of Defense may waive any requirement under subsection (a), (b), or (c) that certain information be included in a report under that subsection if the Secretary determines that inclusion of that information in the report would adversely affect the national security. Any such waiver shall be made on a case-by-case basis.

"(2) If the Secretary exercises the authority provided under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall provide the information described in that subsection with respect to the special access program concerned, and the justification for the waiver, jointly to the chairman and ranking minority member of each of the defense committees.

Such a waiver may be granted only on a case-by-case basis in the case of an individual officer and in the case of a general or flag officer only under exceptional circumstances in which the waiver is necessary to meet a critical need of the armed forces, as determined by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The total number of waivers granted under this paragraph during any fiscal year may not exceed 5 percent of the total number of officers selected for the joint specialty during that fiscal year.".

"(D) a qualifying reassignment (as described in subsection (g)(4)).

"(2) Service in a joint duty assignment outside the United States or in Alaska or Hawaii.

"(e) AVERAGE TOUR LENGTHS.—(1) The Secretary shall ensure that the average length of joint duty assignments during any fiscal year (after fiscal year 1990), measured by the lengths of the joint duty assignments ending during that fiscal year, meets the standards prescribed in subsection (a).

"(2) In computing the average length of joint duty assignments for purposes of paragraph (1), the Secretary may exclude the following service:

The prohibition on counting certain tours of duty in the preceding sentence does not apply to a joint duty assignment which follows a reassignment described in paragraph (4)(B).

"(4) For purposes of paragraph (1)(B), a qualifying reassignment is a reassignment of an officer from a joint duty assignment—

"(A) for unusual personal reasons (including extreme hardship and medical conditions) beyond the control of the officer or the armed forces; or

"(B) to another joint duty assignment immediately after—

"(i) the officer was promoted to a higher grade if the reassignment was made because no joint duty assignment was available within the same organization that was commensurate with the officer's new grade; or

"(ii) the officer's position was eliminated in a reorganization.".

(b) CONSECUTIVE ASSIGNMENTS WITHIN SAME ORGANIZATION.—Section 668 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

Before January 1, 1992, an officer of the Navy designated as a qualified nuclear propulsion officer may be appointed to the grade of rear admiral (lower half) without regard to the preceding sentence, but an officer so appointed may not be appointed to the grade of rear admiral until the officer completes a full tour of duty in a joint duty assignment.".

TITLE XIV—FOREIGN RELATIONS MATTERS

SEC. 1401. COMMENDATION OF ARMED FORCES IN PERSIAN GULF FOR SUCCESS OF CERTAIN OPERATIONS

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Armed Forces of the United States are currently engaged in operations in the Persian Gulf, including operations to escort United States flag vessels moving through the Gulf, in order to protect national security interests of the United States and the principle of freedom of navigation in international waters.

(2) The government of Iran, through the use of its armed forces and revolutionary guards, is engaging in ongoing activities, including the laying of mines in international waters, to disrupt shipping in the Persian Gulf.

(3) During the night of September 21-22, 1987, Army and Naval forces of the United States detected an Iranian mine-laying activity underway in international waters in the Persian Gulf and, in an outstanding instance of joint military operations, tracked and neutralized the boat carrying out the mine laying.

(4) On October 8, 1987, elements of the Armed Forces of the United States, acting jointly, successfully defended themselves against an attack by Iranian forces in the Persian Gulf.

(5) The success of those joint operations (A) serves notice to Iran that the United States will react decisively and effectively to such hostile activities, and (B) may result in reduced risk to United States interests in the Persian Gulf.

(6) There is precedent throughout the history of the United States for Congress to recognize and commend similar operations by the Armed Forces of the United States, including Congressional praise on February 3, 1802, of "the gallant conduct" of certain members of a United States Naval force in the Wars with the Barbary Powers.

(b) CONGRESSIONAL COMMENDATIONS.—The Congress hereby—

(1) declares that those members of the Armed Forces who participated in the joint operations of September 21-22, 1987, and October 8, 1987, in the Persian Gulf acted in the finest military and naval traditions of the United States and displayed exemplary professionalism, skill, and dedication; and

(2) commends those members, and all members of the Armed Forces who acted in support of those operations, for their participation in those important and successful operations.

SEC. 1402. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING JUSTIFICATION FOR SINKING IRANIAN VESSELS

It is the sense of the Senate that the Armed Forces of the United States are fully justified in sinking any Iranian vessel which threatens the safe passage of (1) any warship of the United States, or (2) any other vessel known to have on board any citizen of the United States. This section shall not in itself be construed as legislative authority for any specific military operation.

SEC. 1403. UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD PANAMA

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The executive, judicial, and legislative branches of the Government of Panama are now under the influence and control of the Panamanian Defense Forces.

(2) A broad coalition of church, business, labor, civic, and political groups in Panama has called for an objective and thorough investigation of allegations concerning serious violations of law by certain officials of the Government of Panama and the Panamanian Defense Forces and has insisted that General Noriega and others involved relinquish their official positions until such an investigation has been completed.

(3) The Panamanian people continue to be denied the full rights and protections guaranteed by their constitution, as evidenced by continuing censorship and the closure of the independent media, arrests without due process, and instances of the use of excessive force by the Panamanian Defense Forces.

(4) Political unrest and social turmoil in Panama can only be resolved if the Government of Panama begins to demonstrate respect for and adherence to all provisions of the Panamanian constitution.

(b) POLICY.—Therefore, it is the sense of Congress that, subject to the condition expressed in subsection (c), the United States should take the following actions:

(1) Cease all economic and military assistance provided to the Government of Panama under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Arms Export Control Act, other than assistance to meet immediate humanitarian concerns.

(2) Suspend all shipments of military equipment (including spare parts for military equipment) to the Government of Panama or to any of its agencies or institutions.

(3) Reassess whether the United States should terminate the importation into the United States of sugar, syrup, and molasses produced in Panama and reallocate among other foreign countries the quantities of such products that otherwise would be imported from Panama.

(c) CONDITIONS.—It is further the sense of Congress that the United States should take the actions described in subsection (b) unless, within 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act—

(1) the Government of Panama has demonstrated substantial progress in the effort to assure civilian control of the armed forces and that the Panama Defense Forces and its leaders have been removed from nonmilitary activities and institutions;

(2) the Government of Panama has established an independent investigation into allegations of illegal actions by members of the Panama Defense Forces;

(3) a nonmilitary transitional government is in power; and

(4) all constitutional guarantees, including freedom of the press, have been restored to the people of Panama.

SEC. 1404. CONGRESSIONAL STATEMENTS CONCERNING VIETNAMESE OCCUPATION OF CAMBODIA AND JAPANESE TRADE WITH VIETNAM

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) during the nine years since Vietnam invaded Cambodia in late 1978, most Western countries have pledged to maintain an embargo on trade with and developmental aid to Vietnam until Vietnamese troops are withdrawn from Cambodia;

(2) Japan joined in this embargo by freezing approximately $135,000,000 in grants and concessionary loans to Vietnam and reducing trade levels with Vietnam from $220,000,000 in 1978 to $120,000,000 the following year;

(3) despite the fact that 140,000 Vietnamese troops continue to occupy Cambodia, Japan's economic ties with Vietnam have grown steadily since 1982, reaching a current annual trade level of $230,000,000;

(4) this trade has included trade in goods and technology which enhances the productive capacity and the infrastructure base of Vietnam; and

(5) the 65,000,000 people of Vietnam are a tempting lure for investors seeking low wages and for traders seeking new markets.

(b) CONDEMNATION OF VIETNAMESE OCCUPATION OF CAMBODIA.—The Congress hereby—

(1) reaffirms its condemnation of the continued Vietnamese occupation of the sovereign State of Cambodia, an activity which violates all standards of conduct befitting a responsible nation and contravenes all recognized principles of international law; and

(2) reaffirms its call for Vietnam to withdraw from Cambodia as the only way Vietnam can expect to end its self-induced economic isolation.

(c) STATEMENT ON JAPANESE TRADE WITH VIETNAM.—The Congress hereby strongly urges the Government of Japan to—

(1) continue to refrain from granting to Vietnam any official economic assistance;

(2) refrain from granting to Vietnam any form of trade financing, including export credits, trade-related credit insurance, and extended loans for infrastructure development;

(3) continue to discourage its private business sector from exporting to Vietnam goods and technology which enhance the productive capacity and the infrastructure base of Vietnam, including in particular equipment for—

(A) oil exploration and development,

(B) forestry and fishery production,

(C) development of raw materials for light industries, and

(D) the upgrading of export productive capacities; and

(4) strongly discourage the private business sector of Japan from providing financing which in any way facilitates trade with Vietnam.

SEC. 1405. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON INTRODUCTION OF ARMED FORCES INTO NICARAGUA FOR COMBAT

Congress hereby reaffirms the sense of Congress expressed in the first session of the 99th Congress (in section 1451 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1986 (Public Law 99-145; 99 Stat. 760)), that United States Armed Forces should not be introduced into or over Nicaragua for combat. However, nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the authority and responsibility of the President or Congress under the Constitution, statutes, or treaties of the United States in force.

PART D—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY SEMICONDUCTOR TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH EXCELLENCE INITIATIVE

SEC. 3141. FINDINGS

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Semiconductors and related microelectronic devices are key components in computers, telecommunications equipment, advanced defense systems, and other equipment.

(2) Aggregate sales of such equipment, in excess of $230,000,000,000 annually, comprise a significant portion of the gross national product of the United States.

(3) The leadership position of the United States in advanced technology is threatened by (A) competition from foreign businesses which is promoted and facilitated by the increasingly active involvement of foreign governments, and (B) other changes in the nature of foreign competition.

(4) The principal cause of the relative shift in strength of the United States and its semiconductor competitors is the establishment of a long-term goal by a major foreign competitor to achieve world superiority in semiconductor research and manufacturing technology and the pursuit of such goal by that competitor by effectively marshalling all of the government, industry, and academic resources needed to achieve that goal.

(5) Although the United States semiconductor industry leads all other principal United States industries in terms of its reinvestment in research and development, that has been insufficient by worldwide standards.

(6) Electronic equipment is essential to protect the national security of the United States, as is evidenced by the allocation of approximately 35 percent of the total research, development, and procurement budgets of the Department of Defense to electronics research.

(7) The Armed Forces of the United States will eventually depend extensively on foreign semiconductor technology unless significant steps are taken, and taken at an early date, to retain United States leadership in semiconductor technology research.

(8) It is in the interests of the national security and national economy of the United States for the United States to regain its traditional world leadership in the field of semiconductors.

(9) The most effective means of regaining that leadership is through a joint research effort of the Federal Government and private industry of the United States to improve semiconductor manufacturing technology and to develop practical uses for such technology.

(10) In order to meet the national defense needs of the United States and to insure the continued vitality of a commercial manufacturing base in the United States, it is essential that priority be given to the development, demonstration, and advancement of the semiconductor technology base in the United States.

(11) The national laboratories of the Department of Energy are a major national research resource, and the extensive involvement of such laboratories in the semiconductor research initiatives of the Federal Government and private industry would be an effective use of such laboratories and would help insure the success of such initiatives.

SEC. 3142. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE SEMICONDUCTOR MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH INITIATIVE

The Secretary of Energy shall initiate and carry out a program (hereinafter in this subtitle referred to as the "Initiative") of research on semiconductor manufacturing technology and on the practical applications of such technology. The Secretary may carry out the Initiative in a way that complements the activities of a consortium of United States semiconductor manufacturers, materials manufacturers, and equipment manufacturers, established for the purpose of conducting research concerning advanced semiconductor manufacturing techniques and developing techniques to adopt manufacturing expertise to a variety of semiconductor products.

SEC. 3143. PARTICIPATION OF NATIONAL LABORATORIES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

SEC. 3145. OTHER DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY RESOURCES

(a) Availability of Resources—Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of Energy may make available to the Department of Defense, to any other department or agency of the Federal Government, and to any consortium that has entered into an agreement in furtherance of the Initiative any facilities, personnel, equipment, services, and other resources of the Department of Energy for the purpose of conducting research and development projects under the Initiative consistent with section 3143(a).

(b) Reimbursement.—The Secretary may make facilities available under this section only to the extent that the cost of the use of such facilities is reimbursed by the user.

SEC. 3146. BUDGETING FOR SEMICONDUCTOR MANUFACTURING TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH

(a) Budget Submission.—To the extent the Secretary considers appropriate and necessary, the Secretary of Energy, in preparing the research and development budget of the Department of Energy to be included in the annual budget submitted to the Congress by the President under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, shall provide for programs, projects, and activities that encourage the development of new technology in the field of semiconductors.

(b) Budget Categories.—The programs, projects, and activities described in subsection (a) shall be included in the budget for general science and research activities of the Department of Energy, except that any programs, projects, and activities that directly support and directly benefit the defense activities of the Department shall be included in the budget for atomic energy defense activities of the Department of Energy.

SEC. 3147. COST-SHARING AGREEMENTS

(a) Permitted Provisions.—The director of each national laboratory of the Department of Energy that is participating in the Initiative or the contractor operating any such national laboratory, in carrying out programs under a contract with the Department of Energy, may include in any research and development agreement entered into with a domestic firm in connection with such Initiative a cooperative provision for the domestic firm to pay a portion of the cost of the research and development activities.

(b) Limitations.—(1) Not more than an amount equal to 1 percent of any national laboratory's annual budget shall be received from nonappropriated funds derived from contracts entered into under the Initiative in any fiscal year, except to the extent approved in advance by the Secretary of Energy.

(2) No Department of Energy national laboratory may receive more than $10,000,000 of nonappropriated funds under any cooperative research and development agreement entered into under this subsection in connection with the Initiative, except to the extent approved in advance by the Secretary of Energy.

SEC. 3148. DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY OVERSIGHT OF COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS RELATING TO THE INITIATIVE

(a) Provisions Relating to Disapproval and Modification of Agreements.—If the Secretary of Energy desires an opportunity to disapprove or require the modification of any agreement under section 3147, the agreement shall provide a 90-day period within which such action may be taken, beginning on the date the agreement is submitted to the Secretary.

(b) Record of Agreements.—Each national laboratory shall maintain a record of all agreements entered into under this section.

SEC. 3149. AVOIDANCE OF DUPLICATION

In carrying out the Initiative, the Secretary of Energy shall ensure that unnecessary duplicative research is not performed at the research facilities (including the national laboratories of the Department of Energy) that are participating in the Initiative.

SEC. 3150. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 1988 the sum of $25,000,000 for general science and research activities of the Department of Energy under the Initiative.

(a) In General—The Secretary of Energy shall adopt procedures to provide for timely and efficient transfer of semiconductor technology developed under the Initiative pursuant to applicable laws, executive orders, and regulations.

(b) Plan for Commercialization Enhancement.—(1) Not later than one year after the date on which funds are first appropriated to conduct the Initiative, the Secretary of Energy shall transmit to the committees of Congress named in paragraph (2) a plan for the transfer of semiconductor technology and information generated by the Initiative.

(2) The committees of Congress referred to in paragraph (1) are the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, and the Committee on Science and Technology of the House of Representatives.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1748) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1988 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for fiscal year 1988 for the Armed Forces, to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1989 for certain specified activities of the Department of Defense, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF CONFERENCE ACTION

The conferees recommend authorizations for the National defense functions of the Government (budget function 050) for fiscal year 1988 based upon two alternative levels of new budget authority as contained in the Budget Resolution. In providing $296 billion for National Defense, the budget resolution reserved $7 billion for National Defense, the budget resolution reserved $7 billion of that sum from availability for appropriation pending enactment of certain deficit reduction legislation, leaving a level of $289 billion available for appropriation.

The "conference agreement" characterized in this statement of managers is based upon an overall level of $296 billion, and the "contingent level" is based on an overall level of $289 billion.

As provided in section 3, the "conference agreement" figures apply unless, as of the date of the enactment of the conference report, legislation has not been enacted that causes the Congress to provide for new budget authority for the national defense function in an amount greater than $289 billion. For example, under the Budget Resolution, enactment of certain tax and reconciliation legislation would cause the new budget authority to be increased to $296 billion. At the time for the conferees completed action it was not clear if an agreement would be reached, and whether that agreement would include tax and reconciliation legislation, that would cause the Congress to provide for a level for defense greater than $289 billion. However, the conferees intend that any agreement that is reached and is subsequently enacted in any form will result in the "conference agreement" level of authorization applying. However, until such legislation is enacted, the "contingent level" would be in effect.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conferees recommend authorization for the Department of Defense for procurement, research and development, test and evaluation, operation and maintenance, working capital funds, military construction, family housing, and for civil defense that total $213.7 billion. This figure is $11.7 billion below the President's request, $3.9 billion below the Senate amendment, and $9.2 billion above the House bill.

The conferees have agreed to authorizations for the Department of Energy National Security programs that total $7.827 billion. This figure is $223 million below the President's budget request, $23 million below the Senate amendment, and $9 million below the House bill.

CONTINGENT LEVEL

At the contingent level the conferees recomment authorizations for the Department of Defense for procurement, research and development, test and evaluation, operation and maintenance, working capital funds, military construction, family housing, and for civil defense that total $207.6 billion. This figure is $17.8 billion below the President's request, $10 billion below the Senate amendment, and $3.1 billion above the House bill.

The conferees have agreed to authorizations for the Department of Energy National Security programs that total $7.827 billion. This figure is $223 million below the President's budget request, $23 million below the Senate amendment, and $9 billion below the House bill.

CONFORMING TO THE BUDGET RESOLUTION

The conferees have included a provision (sec. 4) that would limit appropriations made pursuant to authorizations in the bill so that the total for new budget authority and for outlays for the national defense function (function 050) do not exceed the levels specified in the Budget Resolution for fiscal year 1988. (The budget resolution provides for budget authority of $296 billion and outlays of $289.5 billion—the "conference agreement"—and for budget authority of $289 billion and outlays of $283.6 billion—the "contingent level".) Specifically at the "conference agreement" appropriations would be limited to $295.9 billion or to such lessor amount necessary to limit new outlays to $172.9 billion, and at the "contingent level" appropriations would be limited to $288.9 billion or to such lessor amount necessary to limit new outlays to $167 billion. (These figures differ from those in the budget resolution only because there are a few accounts in the defense function not authorized in this bill and because a large portion of the outlays in the defense function result from appropriations made in prior years.)

EXPIRATION OF FISCAL YEAR 1989 AUTHORIZATIONS

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 802) that would provide that authorizations for appropriations in the bill would be effective only with respect to appropriations made during the current session of Congress. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend direct authorizations for fiscal year 1989, under both the "conference agreement" and the "contingent level", totaling $144.1 billion and have included a provision (sec. 5) that would provide that authorizations for fiscal year 1989 expire at the end of the current session of Congress unless appropriations are enacted during this session of Congress.

SUMMARY TABLE OF AUTHORIZATIONS

The defense authorization bill provides authorizations for appropriations but does not provide budget authority. Budget authority is provided in appropriations bills.

In order to relate the conference recommendation to the budget resolution, matters in addition to the dollar authorizations contained in the bill must be taken into account. A number of programs in the defense function are authorized permanently, or in certain instances, authorized in other annual legislation. In addition the authorization bill establishes personnel levels and includes a number of legislative provisions affecting military compensation.

The table below summarizes authorizations included in the bill for fiscal year 1988 and, in addition, summarizes the implication of the conference action for the budget totals for National Defense (Budget Function 050).

DIVISION A—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATIONS

TITLE I—PROCUREMENT

DEFENSE WIDE ISSUES

CHEMICAL DETERRENT PROGRAM

Chemical demilitarization

The budget request contained authorization of $87.4 million, including operations and maintenance, and research and development for the chemical demilitarization program. Further, the fiscal year 1987 supplemental request included $250 million for procurement and $250 million for military construction.

The House bill would authorize $389.1 million for the chemical demilitarization program for fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $87.4 million for the program.

The House bill contains a provision (sec. 112) that would require the Secretary of Defense by February, 1988 to issue the final Programmatic Environmental Impact Statement. Obligation of the fiscal year 1988 funds would be restricted until the Secretary of Defense certifies that the demilitarization plan has been revised to include (1) a program for the evaluation of alternate disposal technologies and selection of such technology, (2) full-scale operational verification of the technology or technologies selected after the evaluation program, and (3) maximum protection for the public. The Secretary of Defense would be required by March, 1988 to submit an alternate demilitarization plan incorporating these criteria, and to specify any revised schedule or funding requirements necessary to meet these requirements. This, however, should not restrict parallel or concurrent development of competing technologies. Finally, the Secretary of Defense would be directed to conduct an ongoing program of surveillance and assessment of the condition of the existing chemical weapons stockpile.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 142) with only minor technical differences.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Consistent with this provision and existing law, the conferees agreed to authorize funds for fiscal year 1988 that would not prejudice or predetermine the Secretary's decision prior to the submission of an alternate demilitarization plan. The conferees encourage the Secretary of Defense to request a reprogramming if necessary at the time of submission of such plan. As a result, the conferees agreed to authorize $125.1 million for the chemical demilitarization program.

Binary chemical munitions

The budget request contained a total of $25 million, $14.8 million in Air Force Other Procurement and $10.2 million in Navy Other Procurement, to complete low-rate initial production of a small quantity of the Bigeye bomb in fiscal year 1988.

The House bill would delete all funds for Bigeye in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $5 million for initial production of the Bigeye.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees were advised that the interruption in the Bigeye operational testing program will delay certification of the Bigeye in accordance with previous congressional direction. Therefore, the conferees agreed to the deletion of the production funds in the expectation that the money will not be required in fiscal year 1988. The conferees take this action without prejudice towards the Bigeye program or any future decision concerning production of the Bigeye bomb.

The conferees agreed to the importance of a long-range delivery capability for binary munitions and agreed to transfer the $5 million deleted from the Bigeye program to the Secretary of Defense to pursue research and development of long-range stand-off chemical delivery systems.

The following table summarizes the conferees' recommendations with respect to the binary munitions production program.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 117) that would prohibit the removal of existing U.S. chemical munitions currently stored in Europe unless they are replaced with binary chemical munitions stored on the soil of at least one European member nation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to include a provision (sec. 126) that would modify the House language. Specifically, section 126 would reflect congressional support for policy that would link the removal and replacement of existing chemical munitions in Europe with binary chemical weapons.

This revision would not require such replacement. Nonetheless, it is the judgment of the conferees that it is essential to maintain an adequate and modern chemical weapon deterrent in NATO. Absent a treaty banning chemical weapons, it should, therefore, be the policy of the United States government that removal of the existing chemical deterrent in NATO should be accompanied by the stationing of binary chemical weapons in the least one European member nation of NATO.

The conferees further agreed that such policy should not apply to the removal of the existing unitary chemical weapons from Europe in a national security emergency involving contingencies outside NATO, or to the removal of unitary chemical weapons from Europe to protect public health and safety.

AUTHORIZATION QUANTITIES

The conferees understand that in certain instances favorable contract prices would have allowed the services to buy more of an item than authorized in the report tables accompanying the Defense authorization bill. The conferees were requested to consider removing such constraints when appropriate to do so.

The conferees agree that if certain criteria are met, the services should be permitted to procure greater quantities of an item as long as those quantities can be acquired within the dollar authorization established in the report for that line item. Accordingly, numerical ceilings established in the report may be exceeded and additional quantities of an item procured if:

(1) the additional items can be procured without exceeding the line dollar authorization established for that item;

(2) funding is derived from savings from that line item;

(3) the purchase of additional items would not exceed established inventory objectives;

(4) the program for the item is stable and mature; and

(5) no provision in law or report language states to the contrary.

FMU-139 ELECTRONIC FUZE

The conferees support efforts to provide fair competition for procurement of defense articles wherever feasible. However, in an era of shrinking defense budgets, the conferees are concerned about the creation of production capacity beyond that required for adequate competition. In the case of the FMU-139 electronic bomb fuze, for example, some question exists as to whether future procurements will approach the combined production capacity of the producers in place and competing for contracts. Therefore, the conferees direct that the Secretary of Defense present rationale and supporting analysis to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives before contracting for additional capacity for the production of FMU-139 fuzes.

REMOTELY PILOTED VEHICLES (RPV)

The budget request contained $38.8 million for Navy short range systems and $49.3 million for an Army Intelligence/Electronic Warfare RPV.

The House bill would deny the requested amounts by each of the services and would authorize $45.4 million in a Procurement, Defense Agencies account for the procurement of a non-developmental item (NDI) system to meet the requirements of all services. The Senate bill authorized the requested programs.

The conferees agree that there is a lack of focused management within the Department of Defense for Remotely Piloted Vehicles and that the services are pursuing programs and technologies which should be merged to avoid duplication and ensure cost effective approaches to fielding expeditiously a needed capability for the conventional forces.

The conferees agreed to authorize $45.4 million for procurement of a short-range RPV system to meet all service needs. The conferees authorize the funds in the Procurement, Defense Agencies account and expect the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence to provide the management oversight for a DOD family of non-lethal RPVs.

T-700 ENGINE COMPETITION

The Army and Navy both have expressed their intention to procure future buys of T-700 Class helicopter engines competitively. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment would support the services' commitment to full and fair competition and include directions to that effect.

The conferees direct that the acquisition program for the T-700 engine be structured such that not less than 50 percent of the aggregate cost of engines procured over the life of the program subsequent to the first two years be manufactured in the United States. In order to protect defense preparedness, every part in the selected engine must be capable of being manufactured in the United States. In evaluating the competitive options for selecting the engine, the department should consider the total cost of introducing the engine into DOD inventories, not just the initial unit prices of the engines.

The House recedes.

LONG-RANGE ARMY ACQUISITION PLANS

Last year, the conferees directed the Secretary of the Army to undertake a comprehensive review of its acquisition plans for major combat weapons. The Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives examined the Army's road map for major combat systems and objected to the Army's plan to terminate or reduce significantly most of the production of their major combat systems several years before the next generation of follow-on equipment would be entering production. As a result, the conferees chose to provide additional funds above the requested levels for procurement of five primary combat systems.

In light of the continued need to improve U.S. conventional defenses, the conferees expect the Department of Defense to ensure that sufficient resources are provided for continued production of U.S. Army combat equipment beyond fiscal year 1988.

To ensure that production is sustained, the conferees agreed to authorize funds for several Army programs in fiscal year 1989. The Senate committee report (S. Rept. 100-57) contained a recommendation that the department provide sufficient resources to the Army to attain certain force modernization objectives. The conferees support this guidance.

Because these actions redirect the Army's present priorities, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to re-evaluate the Army's total requirements and submit a revised master plan at the time of submission of fiscal year 1989 request.

DEPLETED URANIUM PENETRATORS

In report language (H. Rept. 100-58) accompanying H.R. 1748, the fiscal year 1988 Defense authorization bill, the House Armed Services Committee addressed the requirement for break out of procurement of depleted uranium penetrators for ammunition. The committee recommended that procurement of the penetrator should be broken out, procured competitively from at least two sources and furnished to the contractors directly by the United States government.

Certain restrictions would apply, however. The breakout acquisition plan would be applicable only if the Secretary of Defense certified that such action (1) would not result in any increased costs to the government for the ammunition round in question and (2) the manufacturer of the round warrants the performance of the full up round.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 100-57) accompanying S. 1174, the fiscal year 1988 defense authorization bill, did not address the issue.

Subsequent to the issuance of both the House and Senate reports the Department of the Army, as single manager for ammunition, issued a policy statement on August 17, 1987 regarding the acquisition of depleted uranium penetrators. The conferees endorse the Army's decision to maintain two producers in the production base for all rounds containing depleted uranium penetrators.

AIRCRAFT, ARMY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $2,474.0 million for procurement of Army aircraft in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $2,703.1 million for Army aircraft. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,805.9 million for Army aircraft.

The conferees agreed to authorize $2,864.7 million for procurement of Army aircraft in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $2,786.6 million for procurement of aircraft in fiscal year 1988 at the contingent level.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

AH-64 (Apache)

The budget request contained $654.6 million for procurement of 67 AH-64 Apache helicopters and no authorization for fiscal year 1989 advance procurement.

The House bill would authorize $752.8 million for 77 AH-64 helicopters and $36.0 million for advance procurement. The Senate amendment would authorize $880.2 million for 90 AH-64 helicopters and $40.0 million for advance procurement.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 108(a)) that would direct that one battalion of Apache helicopters be designated for the Army National Guard as part of the continued modernization initiative. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend authorization of $836.1 million for the procurement of 80 AH-64 (Apache) helicopters and $36.0 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to designate one battalion for the Army National Guard.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $800.0 million for procurement of 77 AH-64 helicopters at the contingent level.

The House recedes with an amendment.

OV-1 surveillance aircraft (Mohawk)

The budget request contained $17.484 million for modification of the OV-1 surveillance aircraft, of which $11.3 million was to upgrade the UPD-7 radar system of the OV-1D aircraft. The House bill authorized $6.184 million for the modification program and denied the request of $11.3 million for the UPD-7 radar upgrade for the OV-1D. The Senate amendment authorized the full amount requested.

The conferees agreed to authorize a total of $17.5 million. The conferees recommend an authorization of $11.984 million at the contingency level, of which $5.8 million is to initiate the upgrade of the UPD-7 radar. The conferees believe that an upgrade for all of the requested aircraft may be unwarranted in light of the proposed E-8A Joint STARS program and the authorized moving target indicator upgrade of the TR-1 Advanced Synthetic Aperture Radar System.

The conferees are concerned that the OV-1 aircraft is experiencing a high accident rate, due in part to the aircraft's age, and believe that alternatives to the OV-1 should be considered.

The conferees request the Army review the accident record of the aircraft, assess the OV-1's peacetime and wartime capabilities and present to the Congress a restructured aircraft modification schedule which reflects an accelerated phase out of the older aircraft. The conferees expect the results of the review be provided to Congress prior to the obligation of fiscal year 1988 funds for the radar upgrade.

Army Helicopter Improvement Program (AHIP)

The budget contained no request for continuation of the AHIP modification program for the OH-58 scout helicopters and $48.1 million to terminate the program.

The House bill would authorize $149.1 million for 36 modifications and $22 million for advance procurement of fiscal year 1989 production. The Senate amendment would authorize $48.1 million to terminate the program.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 108(b)) that would restrict obligation of the advance procurement funds until the Secretary certifies that operational test results indicate the AHIP aircraft is the most cost-effective scout helicopter available to the Army. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend authorization of $138.1 million for the AHIP and $22.0 million for advance procurement. The conferees agreed to provision (sec. 111(a)), that would restrict obligation of the advance procurement funds until a certification is provided.

The Senate recedes.

Special Operations Forces (SOF) aircraft modifications

The budget request contained $121.8 million for the Special Operations Forces (SOF) aircraft modification program.

The House bill would authorize $79.8 million for the program. The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested.

The conferees strongly support the acquisition of aircraft to perform the long-range penetration mission for the special operations forces. But, the conferees are concerned that the Army's program, as structured, is too highly concurrent. Thus, the conferees direct that of the $101.1 million authorized, not more than $43.7 million be obligated prior to completion of final assembly of the prototype.

Avionics support equipment

The budget request contained $23.56 million to purchase aviation night vision goggles.

The House bill would authorize the amounts requested. The Senate amendment would authorize $60.06 million to accelerate by two years the procurement of aviation night vision goggles.

The conferees agreed to authorize $60.06 million to accelerate the procurement of aviation night vision goggles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $23.56 million at the contingent level.

MISSILES, ARMY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $2,458.5 million for procurement of Army missiles in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $2,270.2 million for Army missiles. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,412.9 million for Army missiles.

The conferees agreed to authorize $2,425.9 million for procurement of Army missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $2,355.9 million at the contingent level for procurement of missiles in fiscal year 1988.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Forward area air defense system, line-of-sight forward-heavy

The budget request contained $59.4 million to initiate procurement of a non-development item for the Air Defense System, Heavy.

The House bill would authorize $5.0 million for the program. The Senate amendment would authorize $16.9 million for the program.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 121(a)) that would prohibit the Army from procuring any forward area air defense system (line-of-sight-heavy) unless the Secretary of the Army certifies that the system selected for procurement can satisfy full system requirements. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees are concerned that the acquisition plan specified for the forward area air defense line-of-sight forward-heavy system repeats the mistakes of the DIVAD program. The Army's plan envisions procurement of systems before the results of any comprehensive operational testing are available. The conferees support the need to proceed with an air defense program but do not intend to permit procurement of any system that does not meet Army requirements.

The conferees recommend authorization of $33.5 million in advance procurement for this system in fiscal year 1988. The conferees agreed to a provision (sec. 111(d)) that would restrict the obligation of these funds until (1) the operational tests are completed; (2) the Secretary of Defense certifies that the system meets or exceeds all of the operational requirements and the performance specifications for the system; and (3) both the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation and the Comptroller General provide to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives their assessment of the testing and system preformance.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Multiple Launch Rocket System (MLRS)

The budget request contained $424.4 million for procurement of 72,000 rockets and 24 self-propelled launcher loaders.

The House bill would authorize $424.4 million for procurement of 72,000 rockets and 24 launchers. The Senate amendment would authorize $459.4 million for procurement of 72,000 rockets and 44 MLRS launchers.

The conferees recommend authorizations of $459.4 million for procurement of 72,000 rockets and 44 MLRS launchers. The conferees recommend a total authorization of $424.4 million at a contingent level for procurement of 72,000 rockets and 24 launchers.

Missile procurement spares and repair parts

The budget request contained $246.6 million for procurement of spares and repair parts for missiles.

The House bill would authorize $176.6 million for procurement of spares. The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested.

The conferees agreed to authorize $246.6 million for procurement of spares and repair parts.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $211.6 million at a contingent level for spares.

WEAPONS AND TRACKED COMBAT VEHICLES, ARMY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $3,152.5 million for procurement of weapons and tracked combat vehicles for the Army. The House bill would authorize $3,345.7 million for fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $3,410.4 million.

The conferees agreed to authorize $3,435.1 million for procurement of weapons and tracked combat vehicles for the Army in fiscal year 1988.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Bradley Fighting Vehicle

The budget request contained $699.4 million for the procurement of 616 Bradley Fighting Vehicles in fiscal year 1988 and $37.1 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The House bill would authorize $684.4 million for procurement of 616 Bradleys and $47.1 million for fiscal year 1989 advance procurement. The House bill contained a provision (sec. 108(c)) that would restrict obligation of $10 million in advance procurement funds to support fiscal year 1989 production until the Secretary of Defense certifies that the production of components for the Bradley vehicle is consistent with the production schedule for the vehicle.

Also, section 116 of the House bill would restrict fiscal year 1988 production funds until the Secretary of Defense submits reports on survivability enhancements and corrections to outstanding problems. Further, the Secretary would have to certify that the survivability modifications maximize casualty reductions, and consider fiscal constraints without jeopardizing operational effectiveness.

The Senate amendment would authorize the requested figures and contained no similar provisions.

The conferees agreed to authorize $699.4 million for procurement of 616 Bradley Fighting Vehicles for fiscal year 1988 and $47.1 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The conferees direct that obligation of $10 million in advance procurement funds to support fiscal year 1989 production be restricted until the Secretary of Defense certifies that the production of components for the Bradley vehicle is consistent with the production schedule for the vehicle.

Finally, the conferees agreed to a provision (sec. 123) that would restrict fiscal year 1988 production funds until after the Secretary of Defense (1) submits reports on survivability enhancements for the Bradley vehicle; and (2) certifies that the survivability modifications selected for the vehicle maximize casualty reductions in light of fiscal concerns, without jeopardizing operational effectiveness; and (3) submits a report concerning any outstanding reliability, performance or operational problems.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

M88 recovery vehicle

The conferees agreed to authorize $24.1 million for procurement of long-lead items for the new recovery vehicle. Consistent with the recommendations in title II of the statement of managers, the conferees direct that none of these funds be obligated until the cost and effectiveness analysis is provided to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

M1 Abrams tank

The budget request contained $1,354.7 million to procure 600 M1 Abrams tanks and $156.0 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The House bill would authorize $3,533.2 million for procurement of 720 M1 tanks and $166.0 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The Senate amendment would authorize $1,626.7 million for procurement of 720 M1 tanks and $161.0 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The conferees agreed to authorize $1,607.6 million for procurement of 720 M1 tanks and $166.0 million for fiscal year 1989 advance procurement.

M109 155mm self propelled howitzer modifications (HIP)

The budget request contained $28.2 million for modifications to the M109 155mm self propelled howitzer. The House bill would authorize $42.2 million for the Howitzer Improvement Program. The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The conferees recommend authorization of $42.2 million for the Howitzer Improvement Program. Within the authorized level, the conferees direct that the amount authorized also provide for the application of the Modified Armament System to 737 howitzers in the National Guard and Reserves.

122 mm mortar

The budget request contained $20.9 million for procurement of 332 120 mm mortars for fiscal year 1988. The House bill contained no authorization for 120 mm mortars due to delays in the execution of the program. The Senate amendment would authorize $5.2 million for procurement of 83 120 mm mortars.

The conferees agreed to recommend no authorization for procurement of 120 mm mortars and of 120 mm mortar ammunition. This action is taken in recognition of potential schedule slippage and the availability of prior-year funds that have not yet been obligated for this program. The conferees continue to support procurement of 120mm mortars, so long as the winning system satisfies Army requirements.

AMMUNITION, ARMY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $2,194.3 million for procurement of Army ammunition in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $2,238.8 million for procurement of Army ammunition. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,131.2 million for the same purpose.

The conferees agreed to authorize $2,397.9 million for the procurement of Army ammunition in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $2,215.6 million as a contingent level for procurement of ammunition in fiscal year 1988.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

M772 fuze

The conferees direct that, within the funds authorized for the procurement of ammunition, the Secretary of the Army is to complete the conversion of the technical data package (TDP) to American engineering standards for the M772 fuze.

Copperhead

The budget request contained $100.6 million for the procurement of 2,771 Copperhead projectiles. The Copperhead projectile is the Army's only laser-guided artillery projectile. The House bill would authorize $128.5 million for Copperhead projectiles. The Senate bill would authorize the amount requested.

Last year the statement of managers accompanying the conference report (H. Rept. 99-1001) on the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act directed the evaluation of a second source for the Copperhead projectile. The fiscal year 1988 budget request, however, contained no funds for the second source. The conferees recommend authorization of $128.5 million in order to provide a second source for production if the Secretary of Defense determines that this is the most cost-effective approach.

Production base modernization

The Senate amendment would direct the Army to proceed with the execution of the fiscal year 1986 and fiscal year 1987 production base modernization projects at the Chamberlain Manufacturing Corporation (PEP-422) for which funds were authorized and appropriated by the Congress in fiscal years 1986 and 1987. The House bill contains no similar provision.

The conferees direct the Army to proceed with the modernization projects. The House recedes.

Research Department Explosive (RDX) modernization and stockpiling

The budget request contained no funds for construction of a Research Department Explosive (RDX) manufacturing plant, but did contain $35 million to stockpile these explosives. The House bill would not authorize any funds for construction of a new plant but would authorize the requested amount for stockpiling. The Senate amendment would authorize $35 million for the design and construction of a manufacturing plant but would provide no authorization for stockpiling.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 121(c)) that would allow for the design and construction of an RDX manufacturing plant using one-step turn-key selection procedures or other competitive measures. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to the Senate provision (sec. 111(c)) that would provide authorization for the design and construction of an RDX manufacturing plant using one-step turn-key selection procedures or other competitive measures. The conferees agreed to authorize $146.7 million for this purpose in fiscal year 1988. The conferees recommend a total authorization of $35 million at the contingent level. The budget request of $35 million for stockpiling was deleted.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Riverbank Army Ammunition Plant

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 809) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to activate Riverbank Ammunition Plant.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to authorize $13.3 million above the budget request for the 155mm, HE, ICM 483 round to stockpile M42/46 grenades, and $9.6 million above the budget request for the 60mm H720W/M734 MOF round to stockpile mortar parts, in fiscal year 1988 and fiscal year 1989. The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to use these funds to maintain current workload levels for producers of these items in the mobilization base at the inactive Army ammunition plants.

The conferees also agreed to authorize $20 million in fiscal year 1988 for Provision of Industrial Facilities for facilitization projects at the Riverbank Army Ammunition Plant to expand the production capability at this inactive Army ammunition plant.

Finally, the conferees direct that $2.0 million shall also be provided from Title III for maintenance of Riverbank Army ammunition plant.

The House recedes.

OTHER PROCUREMENT, ARMY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $5,870.9 million for other procurement, Army accounts. The House bill would authorize $5,071.9 million for other procurement. The Senate amendment would authorize $5,522.2 million.

The conferees agreed to authorize $5,494.5 million for other procurement accounts for fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $5,478.2 million at the contingent level for other procurement accounts for fiscal year 1988.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

10-ton trucks

The budget request contained $131.3 million for procurement of 888 Heavy Expanded Mobility Tactical Trucks (HEMTT) for fiscal year 1988. The Budget request also contained $14.2 million in Title II (RDT&E) to initiate a competition for a heavy truck program that incorporates a Palletized Loading System.

The House bill would authorize $293.3 million for procurement of 1,388 HEMTT trucks. The Senate amendment would authorize no funds for procurement of the HEMTT.

The House bill contained no funds in Title II for the initiation of a new truck program. The House bill contained a provision (section 108(d)) that would require the Secretary of the Army to compete the technical data package for the existing HEMTT to meet Army requirements beyond fiscal year 1988. The provision would also require the Secretary of the Army to re-examine requirements and provide for an option for PLS-configured HEMTT vehicles on future solictations.

The Senate amendment provided funds in Title II for a follow-on truck and contained a provision (sec. 121(d)) that would prohibit obligation of any funds for procurement of trucks unless the trucks are acquired through competitive procedures based on performance specifications.

The conferees agreed to authorize $239.3 million for procurement of 1,388 10-ton trucks in fiscal year 1988 and $239.3 million for procurement in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees believe that the process for establishing total Army requirements for equipment ought to provide for stability and efficiency in acquisition. This has not been the case, however, in the heavy truck program and confusion continues to persist as to total Army requirements.

To resolve the annual struggle, the conferees agreed to a provision (sec. 129) that would direct multiyear procurement for not less than 4,737 HEMTT trucks beginning in fiscal year 1988. The conferees expect a fair price for the trucks purchased under this multiyear contract.

The conferees also agree to authorize $17 million in Title II for the competitive evaluation of a heavy truck configured with a Palletized Loading System based on performance specifications. The conferees agreed to a provision (sec. 259) that would direct the Department of Defense to proceed with this evaluation subject to the following: (1) source selection within twenty-four months based on a hardware competition; (2) source selection to be made by the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition; (3) source selection to equitably consider total life-cycle costs including facilitization; and (4) the manufacture and assembly of the winning system to be in the United States.

Supercomputers

The budget request contained $27.4 million to procure supercomputers for the Army.

The House bill contained no authorization for this program. The Senate amendment recommended authorization of the amount requested.

Last year, the conference report (H. Rept. 99-1001) accompanying the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) directed the Secretary of the Army to submit a master plan concerning the acquisition and deployment of supercomputers over the next five years. The conferees are concerned, however, that the report that has been provided to date does not represent a five-year roadmap.

The conferees agreed to authorize $27.4 million for procurement of supercomputers but direct that none of the funds authorized for procurement of supercomputers be obligated until the Secretary of the Army submits a roadmap to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives concerning the requirements, acquisition strategies and deployments of supercomputers over the next five years.

Army Command and Control System (ACCS)

The budget request contained $420.5 million to procure five separate elements of the Army's command, control and communications systems. These elements of the Army's battlefield system include: fire support, maneuver, air defense, data distribution, and intelligence.

The House bill would authorize $270.5 million for an integrated ACCS program. The Senate amendment would authorize $420.5 million for the five individual elements.

The report accompanying the House bill (H. Rept. 100-58) directs the Secretary of the Army to provide the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a master plan for the ACCS program, including a detailed break-out of all of the elements included in the program. The plan is to provide total program funding requirements, as well as testing and deployment schedules. The Senate report contained no similar language.

The conferees agreed to authorize $237.7 million for procurement of the ACCS program. This authorization is provided for an integrated budget line to include: All-Source Analysis System; Maneuver Control System; Advance Field Artillery Tactical Data System; and Forward Area Air Defense Command, Control and Intelligence System. Consistent with recent Army decisions to restructure the management of the ACCS program, the conferees agreed to provide separate authorization of $100.0 million for the Army Data Distribution System. Further, the conferees agreed to require a master plan for the ACCS program.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Aquila remotely piloted vehicle

The budget request contained $179.4 million for procurement of the Aquila remotely piloted vehicle (RPV) system consisting of unmanned air vehicles, ground stations, launcher and recovery subsystems, and maintenance shelters.

The House bill would deny authorization for procurement of Aquila remotely piloted vehicle. The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested.

The conferees have been informed that a production decision regarding the Aquila is premature during fiscal year 1988 due to problems discovered during the operational test. As a result, the Army intends to conduct further test of the system to evaluate the operational concept. Upon completion of the tests, the Secretary of the Army is directed to provide, to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives, a report on this evaluation.

The conferees agreed to authorize $10 million in Title II for this purpose. The conferees further agreed to deny authorization for procurement of the Aquila remotely piloted vehicle for fiscal year 1988.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

SINCGARS radios

The budget request contained $23.5 million to purchase the Single Channel Ground and Airborne Radio Systems (SINCGARS). The House bill and the Senate amendment both authorized the requested amount.

The conferees have been informed that the Army intends to select a second source to produce the SINCGARS radio that can meet the "form, fit and function" requirements of the present SINCGARS radio. The Army claims that this strategy may provide increased radio reliability. Although this approach may increase reliability, the conferees are concerned that this approach may also increase logistics costs. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives an analysis identifying any increase in operating and supply costs which result from second source radios built to form, fit and function.

Further, prior to obligation of fiscal year 1988 procurement funds, the Secretary of Defense is required to certify to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives that the proposed life-cycle support strategy for SINCGARS radios purchased from the second source is consistent with a maintenance concept for all SINCGARS radios.

Command, control and communications (C^3) equipment for Special Operations Forces (SOF) units

The budget request made no specific authorization for the procurement of command, control and communications (C^3) equipment for the Special Operations Forces (SOF). The House bill would provide no authorization for SOFC^3 equipment. The Senate amendment, however, would authorize $15.3 million to be made available to the Commander in Chief of the U.S. Special Operations Command (CINCUSSOC) for procurement of SOF C^3 equipment.

The conferees agreed to authorize $15.3 million for the procurement of command, control and communications equipment for the Special Operations Forces (SOF) units. The conferees further direct the Department of Defense to report to the progress not later than December 1, 1987 on the costs of procuring the required C^3 equipment for USSOC, its subordinate elements, and the SOC's of the unified combatant commands.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $7.0 million at the contingent level for procurement of command, control and communications equipment for SOF units.

The House recedes.

Mission essential equipment

The House bill would provide an authorization of $50 million to produce mission essential equipment throughout the Army's other procurement accounts. This initiative was intended to allow the Army to procure equipment that will improve the combat readiness of early deploying active and reserve combat support and combat service support units in concert with the priority requirements of the CINCS.

The Senate amendment provided no authorization for this purpose.

The conferees agreed to authorize $50 million for mission essential equipment and direct the Secretary of the Army to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives that provides the listing of the items of equipment that would be procured with these funds prior to obligation of these funds.

The Senate recedes.

AIRCRAFT, NAVY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $9,924.9 million for procurement of Navy aircraft in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $9,253.2 million for Navy aircraft programs. The Senate amendment would authorize $9,562.6 million for Navy aircraft.

The conferees recommend authorization of $9,605.0 million for Navy aircraft procurement in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $8,610.1 million at the contingent level for Navy aircraft procurement in fiscal year 1988.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Navy aviation

The conferees reviewed the Navy's plans in aviation modernization in considerable detail. The conferees note that there are serious affordability problems in Naval aviation both in near and long term. Despite the fact the Navy decided to accelerate the procurement of aircraft carriers in fiscal year 1988, it chose to reduce the procurement of combat aircraft. Compared to last year's five year plan, this year's five year plan removed a third of all planned procurement of combat aircraft. The Navy has many combat aircraft in production at inefficient production rates. While this situation is serious in its own right, it is disasterous in the face of impending budget reductions.

The House and Senate took substantially different approaches to solving these problems. The Senate reviewed all programs and determined that there were insufficient funds to support both an Advanced Technical Aircraft (ATA) and a block upgrade version of the A-6, the A-6F. The Senate fully funded the ATA and terminated the A-6F, primarily because the A-6F is vulnerable due to its large radar cross section. The ATA will be a survivable aircraft designed to accomplish the same missions as the A-6.

The House determined that the A-6F should be fully funded because the A-6 series aircraft is the Navy's only all weather medium attack aircraft and is required over the next five years to outfit air wings for expanded carrier force structure. The House effectively terminated the ATA because it determined that a major new program is not affordable in the present budget situation, and because a delay in the program might help resolve several technical uncertainties.

The House also terminated further procurement of the Marine Corps's AV-8B light attack aircraft. The House questioned whether the AV-8B offered sufficient military value to justify the cost of continued procurement in an era of shrinking defense budgets. The House concluded that its limited payload, high maintenance requirements and lack of radar, limit its combat utility. Further, the House noted the Administration's plans to stretch out the production rate starting in fiscal year 1990 adds four years to the program and increases unit costs by as much as 80 percent toward the end of the program.

After considerable negotiation, the conferees adopted the following outline for the future of Navy aviation. First, the conferees recommend full authorization for the Advanced Tactical Aircraft. Second, the conferees terminated further development or procurement of the F model of the A-6. The conferees included a provision (sec. 112(f)) which prohibits the Secretary of the Navy from obligating any funds for purposes of developing or procuring an F model A-6.

In its place, the conferees recommend an authorization of $376.6 million that is available at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy either to procure 11 E models of the A-6, or to initiate a retrofit program for the existing fleet of A-6s. The conferees emphasize that the Navy must at some time initiate a program for upgrading the existing fleet of A-6s, since those aircraft will have to remain in active Navy inventories for the next twenty years. The funds provided this year, however, are available at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy either to initiate that upgrade program or to procure E model A-6s. The conferees also recommend an authorization of $475.5 million for 24 AV-8B aircraft, including advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The conferees also direct the Navy to initiate a program to develop a two-seat, all weather ground attack variant of the F/A-18s, and provided $40 million to initiate that upgrade program. The primary initial emphasis of this program should go to improving the radar on the F/A-18s. The Navy also should consider growth versions of the existing engine that will enable it to meet the threat of the 1990s and beyond. Once the two-seat F/A-18 becomes available, it should be fielded with the Marine Corps initially, so that the A-6s in the Marine Corps shall be freed for transfer to Navy medium attack squadrons.

These programs figured prominently in the conferees deliberations for funding at the contingency level. At the contingent level, the conferees recommend termination of both the A-6 program and the AV-8B program.

The conferees note that the Navy is facing long-term serious financial constraints. It has too many combat aircraft in production at inefficient production rates. Further, several major new programs—such as the F-14D, the V-22, the Long Range ASW Capable Aircraft (LRACA), and the ATA will require substantial increases in funding in upcoming years. In light of these financial constraints and the need to preserve modernization, the conferees determined that the A-6 and the AV-8B programs should be terminated at the contingent funding level.

In order to maintain modernization at the contingent funding level, the conferees direct the Navy to negotiate a multiyear contract for purposes of procuring F/A-18 aircraft, at a rate of 84 aircraft per year. The conferees note that section 2306 of title 10, United States Code, requires stable configuration as a prerequisite for entering into multiyear contracts. The conferees believe that the Secretary of the Navy should enter into a multiyear contract for the F/A-18s even though the contract may cover both the current version and the upgraded ground attack version. The conferees note that the multiyear contract for F-16s involves both single seat and two-seat variants.

A-6E/F attack aircraft (Intruder)

The budget request contained $702.2 million for procurement of 12 A-6F aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $109.9 million for advance procurement of 18 A-6F aircraft in fiscal year 1989, and $41.1 million for procurement of initial spares.

The House bill would authorize the amounts requested. The Senate amendment would deny authorization for the A-6F.

The conferees are concerned that new start procurement of the A-6F, at the same time a significantly more capable successor aircraft (Advanced Tactical Aircraft (ATA)) is under development, is both unaffordable and inconsistent with a declining defense budget.

Further, the conferees believe the Navy should consider extending the service life and upgrading existing A-6 aircraft in lieu of continued A-6 procurement to more cost-effectively satisfy mid-term force level requirements.

Accordingly, authorization for A-6F aircraft is denied. Instead, the conferees recommend authorization of $376.6 million to procure 11 A-6E aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $41.1 million for initial spares, or, $376.6 million to begin a service life extension and upgrade program for existing A-6 aircraft, whichever the Navy decides is most beneficial.

EA-6B electronic warfare aircraft (Prowler)

The budget request contained $336.1 million for procurement of 6 EA-6B aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $17.8 million for advance procurement of 9 EA-6 aircraft in fiscal year 1989, and $3.5 million for procurement of initial spares.

The House bill would authorize $482.8 million for procurement of 12 aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $22.7 million for advance procurement of 12 aircraft in fiscal year 1989, and $16.1 million for initial spares, an increase of six aircraft. The Senate amendment would authorize $482.8 million for procurement of 12 aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $17.8 million for procurement of 6 aircraft in fiscal year 1989, and the request amount for procurement of initial spares.

The conferees recommend authorization of $482.8 million for procurement of 12 aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $22.7 million for advance procurement of 12 aircraft for fiscal year 1989, and $16.1 million for procurement of initial spares.

The Senate recedes.

AV-8B attack aircraft (Harrier)

The budget request contained $564.2 million to procure 32 Harrier aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $64 million for advance procurement of 32 aircraft in fiscal year 1989 and $71.5 million for initial spares.

The House bill would deny authorization for procurement of Harrier aircraft. The Senate amendment would authorize $591.7 million for the Harrier in fiscal year 1988 and $64 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989 and $71.5 million for initial spares.

The conferees recommend authorization of $427.8 million for procurement of 24 Harrier aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $48.0 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989 and $71.5 million for initial spares.

The conferees note that the current budget plan would reduce future procurements to 15 aircraft a year. This would add 4 years to the program and increase procurement unit costs by as much as 80 percent. According to Marine Corps testimony, this action was driven by affordability constraints. However, the same budget would fully fund the planned transition to production for the Marine Corps V-22 Osprey program now in development.

The message is clear. In an era of declining defense budgets, the unique capabilities offered by the AV-8B became unaffordable as a matter of priority within the Department. Reasonable alternatives exist, and the F/A-18 should be considered to supplant the AV-8B for the balance of the Marine Corps light attack requirements.

Consistent with efforts to promote commonality and efficient production rates, the conferees recommend no authorization for procurement of AV-8B aircraft at the contingent level for fiscal year 1988 with the intent of terminating production.

FA-18 fighter attack aircraft (Hornet)

The budget request contained $2,316.6 million to procure 84 aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $156.0 million to support the procurement of 72 aircraft in fiscal year 1989 and $104.4 million for initial spares.

The House bill and the Senate amendment would authorize the requested amounts.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,316.6 million to procure 84 aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $156.0 million to support procurement of 84 aircraft in fiscal year 1989 and $104.4 million for initial spares.

At the contingent level, the conferees recommend authorization of the amounts above. However, to protect efficient production rates in an era of declining budgets, the conferees agreed to a provision (sec. 108(b)) that directs multiyear procurement of the FA-18 aircraft.

CH/MH-53E aircraft (Super Stallion)

The budget request contained $210.7 million for procurement of 14 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $21.8 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The House bill and the Senate amendment would provide authorization for the amounts requested.

The conferees recommend authorization of the amounts requested. Section 112(a) would restrict the obligation of funds for the H-53E helicopters until flight stability test results are reported and would limit delivery of H-53E helicopters to those incorporating appropriate modifications.

AH-1W attack helicopter (Sea Cobra)

The budget request contained $172.7 million for procurement of 22 helicopters to restart Cobra production in fiscal year 1988.

The House bill would authorize $100 million for procurement of 12 helicopters in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested.

The conferees recommend authorization of $135.0 million for procurement of 17 helicopters in fiscal year 1988.

SH-60B antisubmarine assault aircraft (Seahawk)

The budget request contained $98.7 million for procurement of 6 Seahawk aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $26.3 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The House bill would authorize the requested amounts. The Senate amendment would authorize $144.8 million for procurement of 9 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and the amount requested for advance procurement.

The conferees recommend authorization of $144.8 million for procurement of 9 Seahawk aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $26.3 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $98.7 million at the contingent level for procurement of six Seahawk aircraft.

P-3C (Orion)

The budget request contained $146,000 for the P-3C program for fiscal year 1988.

The House bill would authorize $34.1 million for the P-3 program for fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested.

The conferees understand that the Navy is openly competing a long-range airborne ASW capable aircraft (LRAACA) as a successor to the current P-3C that would incorporate an advanced Update IV mission avionics suite. In addition, the conferees were informed that the current P-3C airframe or a variant may be a viable candidate for any airframe competition.

In view of the above, the conferees believe that termination of the P-3C airframe production capability as long as a P-3C type airframe remains a candidate would not be cost effective. Accordingly, the conferees recommend authorization of $34.1 million for the P-3 program for fiscal year 1988 to preserve the integrity of the P-3C airframe production capability until it is selected or rejected as the LRAACA airframe through fair and open competition. The conferees would consider a reprogramming request to transfer remaining P-3C funds to LRAACA if appropriate. Section 112(b) would limit obligations for the fiscal year 1988 P-3 program to those authorized in this bill.

Long range airborne antisubmarine warfare capable aircraft (LRAACA)

The budget request contained no funds for a long range airborne antisubmarine warfare capable aircraft (LRAACA). The House bill would provide no authorization. The Senate amendment would authorize $34.1 million for advance procurement for a LRAACA in fiscal year 1989.

Supporting competition in the Navy's antisubmarine warfare (ASW) program, the conferees recommend authorization of $80.2 million in fiscal year 1988 for advance procurement of the long range airborne ASW aircraft using competitive procedures.

Funds may not be obligated until program justification, source selection and supporting rationale, and the planned use of the funds has been reported to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives.

E-6A electronic communications aircraft (Hermes/TACAMO)

The budget request contained $189.2 million for procurement of three E-6A TACAMO aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $137.7 million for advance procurement for seven aircraft in fiscal year 1989 and $19.9 million for initial spares.

The House bill would authorize $126.1 million for two aircraft in fiscal year 1988, no authorization for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989 and $19.9 million for initial spares pending satisfactory resolution of the basing plan. The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested.

The conferees recommend authorization of $126.1 million for procurement of two aircraft in fiscal year 1988, $137.7 million for advance procurement, and $19.9 million for initial spares.

Modification of aircraft

P-3C series modifications

The budget request contained $127.4 million for modifications to the P-3C series aircraft. The House bill would authorize $172.9 million for P-3C modifications. The Senate amendment would authorize $172.4 million for modifications.

The conferees agreed to authorize $172.9 million for modifications to the P-3C series.

WEAPONS, NAVY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $6,502.3 million for Navy weapons procurement in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $5,815.8 million for Navy programs. The Senate amendemnt would authorize $6,219.5 million for Navy weapons.

The conferees recommend authorization of $5,989.0 million for Navy Weapons procurement in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $5,857.0 million at the contingent level for Navy weapons procurement in fiscal year 1988.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Trident II missiles

The budget request contained $1,931.3 million to procure 66 D-5 missiles in fiscal year 1988, $320.0 million for advance procurement of 66 missiles in fiscal year 1989 and $2.9 million for initial spares.

The House bill would authorize $1.931.3 million to procure 72 missiles, $320 million for advance procurement of 72 missiles in fiscal year 1989, and $2.9 million for initial spares, an increase of 6 missiles in anticipation of potential contract savings. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested.

The conferees recommend authorization of $1,931.3 million to procure 72 Trident II D-5 missiles in fiscal year 1988, $320.0 million for advance procurement of 72 missiles in fiscal year 1989 and $2.9 million for initial spares.

The Senate recedes.

BGM-109 Tomahawk missile

The budget request contained $915.9 million for procurement of 475 Tomahawk missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The House bill would authorize $787.2 million for 475 missiles in recognition of contract savings. The Senate amendment would authorize $835.9 million for 475 missiles.

The conferees recommend authorization of $787.2 million for 475 missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The Senate recedes.

AIM-54A/C Phoenix missile

The budget request contained $398.0 million for procurement of 430 Phoenix missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The House bill would authorize $359.9 million for 430 Phoenix missiles in recognition of contract savings. The Senate amendment would authorize $358.4 million for procurement of 430 missiles.

The conferees are concerned that deployment of Phoenix missiles to operational commanders in the fleet is not receiving adequate emphasis. Though supportive of Navy efforts to establish a second source and compete production of the Phoenix missile, the conferees note that past production has been reduced to provide resoures to a second producer and that current production output is being stored at the contractor's facility for lack of government furnished components. Accordingly, the Navy is directed to take actions necessary to expedite deployment of stored missiles and to procure no fewer than 430 missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommends authorization of $358.4 million to procure 430 Phoenix missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The House recedes with an amendment.

AGM-84A Harpoon missile

The budget request contains $110.7 million for procurement of 124 harpoon missiles in fiscal year 1988 and $51.0 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The House bill would provide authorization of the requested amount for procurement for fiscal year 1989 but no authorization for advance procurement for the Harpoon missile. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested.

The conferees recommend authorization of $110.7 million for procurement of 124 missiles in fiscal year 1988 and no authorization for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989. The conferees did not agree to multiyear procurement of the Harpoon missile.

The Senate recedes.

Aerial Targets

The budget request contained $92.8 million for procurement of aerial targets.

The House bill would authorize $104.1 million for aerial targets, an increase of $11.3 million from the budget request. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested.

The conferees recommend authorization of $104.1 million for procurement of aerial targets in fiscal year 1988.

The Senate recedes.

MK-50 advanced lightweight torpedo

The budget request contained $222.4 million for 153 MK-50 advanced lightweight torpedoes. The House bill contained no authorization for this program. The Senate amendment would authorize $108.4 million for 153 torpedoes.

The conferees recommend authorization of $108.4 million for 60 torpedoes, plus long-lead funds for torpedo procurement in fiscal year 1989. The conferees direct the Navy to use $45.9 million appropriated in fiscal year 1987 for the MK-50 torpedo program for procurement in fiscal year 1988. The conferees further direct and authorize the transfer to the MK-50 torpedo program of $32.1 million in unobligated funds appropriated in fiscal year 1987 for the Vertical Launched ASROC program.

The House recedes with an amendment.

SHIPBUILDING AND CONVERSION, NAVY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $11,065.4 million for the construction, conversion, service life extension, and acquisition of 20 naval vessels for fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $9,924.0 million for 15 ships. The Senate amendment would authorize $10,081.5 million for 17 ships.

The conferees recommend authorization of $9,530.3 million for 19 ships for fiscal year 1988 and transfers of $371.3 million.

The budget request contained $11,858.4 million for 23 ships for fiscal year 1989. The House bill would authorize $7,832.9 million for 12 ships. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,936.4 million for 2 ships.

The conferees recommend authorization of $8,529.7 million for 13 ships for fiscal year 1989.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Trident ballistic missile submarine (SSBN)

The budget request contained $1,330.8 million for the Trident submarine program, including $137.1 million for advance procurement. The House bill would authorize the amount requested. The Senate amendment would authorize $1,290.8 million.

The House recedes.

Aegis ships

The budget request contained $1,937.5 million for 2 CG-47 class Aegis cruisers, including $11 million for advance procurement. The request also contained $2,196.9 million for 3 DDG-51 class guided missile destroyers, including $74.6 million for advance procurement.

The House bill would authorize $3,328.9 million for 4 Aegis cruisers and $5.5 million for advance procurement for the DDG-51 program. The Senate amendment would authorize $4,127 million for 5 Aegis cruisers, as well as $11 million in advance procurement for the CG-47 program and $74.6 million for advance procurement for the DDG-51 program. The Senate amendment would also apply, by transfer, $78.2 million of fiscal year 1987 funds for DDG-51 advance procurement to the fiscal year 1988 program.

The House bill would also authorize $825 million for one Aegis cruiser and $2,196.9 million for 3 DDG-51 guided missile destroyers for fiscal year 1989. The Senate amendment would provide no authorizations for Aegis-equipped ships for fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend authorization for fiscal year 1988 of $3,328.9 million for 5 Aegis cruisers and $5.5 million for advance procurement for the DDG-51 guided missile destroyer program. The conferees recognize that the dollar authorization for the Aegis cruiser program is insufficient to fully fund 5 ships in fiscal year 1988. The conferees recommend authorization for the fifth ship contingent on the availability from savings or offsets of such additional sums as are necessary to fully fund the ship in fiscal year 1988.

For fiscal year 1989 the conferees recommend authorization of $825 million for one Aegis cruiser and $2,929.1 million for four DDG-51 guided missile destroyers. The conferees have provided authorization for one Aegis cruiser for fiscal year 1989 in the event that sufficient funding cannot be identified to allow a fifth Aegis cruiser to be fully funded in fiscal year 1988. Should the fifth Aegis cruiser authorized for fiscal year 1988 be fully funded as described above, the conferees intend that the fiscal year 1989 authorization for one cruiser be vacated.

The conferees also welcome the Department of the Navy to request an additional DDG-51 guided missile destroyer for fiscal year 1989 as program status and budget constraints permit.

Amphibious assault ship (LHD-1)

The budget request contained $772.9 million for one Wasp-class amphibious assault ship, including $32.2 million for advance procurement. This would be the second ship of a four ship multiyear procurement. The House bill would authorize the amount requested. The Senate amendment would authorize $685.3 million plus $32.2 million for advance procurement, a reduction of $55.4 million from the budget request.

The conferees recommend authorization of $752.9 million for one LHD-1 class ship, including $32.2 million for advance procurement.

Dock landing ship (cargo variant) (LSD-41)

The budget request contained $324.2 million for the lead ship of the LSD-41 cargo variant class. The House bill would authorize the amount requested. The Senate amendment contained no authorization for this ship.

The conferees recommend authorization of $324.2 million for the LSD-41 cargo variant program.

Fleet oiler (TAO-187)

The budget request contained $279.1 million for two fleet oilers. The House bill would authorize the amount requested. The Senate amendment would authorize $150 million for one ship.

The Senate recedes.

Fleet oiler (conversion) (AO-177)

The budget request contained $44.1 million for the second conversion of a fleet oiler of the AO-177 class. The House bill would provide no authorization for this program. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested.

The House recedes.

Ocean surveillance ship (TAGOS-SWATH)

The budget requested no authorization for an ocean surveillance ship using the small waterplane area twin hull (SWATH) configuration. Similarly, the House bill would provide no authorization. The Senate amendment would authorize $110.8 million for two TAGOS-SWATH ships.

The conferees note the importance of the ocean surveillance program to the antisubmarine warfare effort of the United States. Incorporation of the SWATH hull technology with the already proven surveillance system will enable operation of this system over a broader range of ocean areas than now possible.

Although the SWATH effort was initiated only recently, the combination of success in the program to date, availability of favorable contract options, and the need for additional ocean surveillance capability argue in favor of proceeding at this time.

The conferees agree to authorizations of $96.5 million for two TAGOS-SWATH ships.

Sealift enhancement

The budget request contained $17.8 million for the sealift enhancement program. The House bill would authorize the amount requested. The Senate amendment would provide no authorizaiton for the program.

The House recedes.

Fast sealift initiative

The budget request contained no authorization for a fast sealift initiative. Similarly, the House bill would provide no authorization. The Senate amendment would authorize $10 million for this program.

The conferees note that a fast sealift initiative can be a highly leveraged investment in the rapid deployment capability of U.S. forces. Because this is a research-oriented effort, however, the conferees agree to include authorization for this initiative in the research and development section of this report.

Undistributed reduction

The Senate amendment would provide for an undistributed reduction in the shipbuilding and conversion account of $240.9 million. The House bill would provide for no similar reduction.

The Senate recedes.

Prior-year transfers

The conferees agree to authorization of transfers of funds from savings realized in shipbuilding programs totaling $371.3 million, as shown in the accompanying table.

Pricing adjustments

Based on demonstrated contract savings achieved on government-furnished equipment, the conferees agree on the following adjustments in the fiscal year 1988 shipbuilding program approved by both the Senate and House of Representatives: SSN-688—$60 million; Landing Craft, Air Cushion (advance procurement)—$10 million; Outfitting—$7 million; and post Delivery—$8 million.

OTHER PROCUREMENT, NAVY

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $4,983.8 million for Navy other procurement in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $4,901.8 million for other procurement programs. The Senate amendment would authorize $4,967.6 million for other procurement.

The conferees recommend authorization of $5,321.6 million for Navy other procurement in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $5,207.1 million at the contingent level for Navy other procurement in fiscal year 1988.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Sonobuoys

The budget request contained $254.9 million for procurement of all types of sonobuoys for fiscal year 1988.

The House bill would authorize the amounts requested. The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested and provide a general increase of $100.0 million for all types of sonobuoys for fiscal year 1988.

In light of recent Soviet advances in submarine quieting, the conferees are concerned that established Navy sonobuoy requirements are not adequately funded.

Accordingly, the conferees recommend authorization of the amounts requested and a general increase of $100.0 million for sonobuoys for fiscal year 1988.

At the contingent level, the conferees recommend a total authorization of the amounts requested and of a general increase of $50 million for sonobuoys for fiscal year 1988.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Sealift support equipment

The budget request contained $51.8 million for sealift support equipment, most of which is for seasheds and adapters. The House bill would authorize the amount requested. The Senate amendment would authorize $63.8 million, an increase of $12 million for seasheds and adapters.

The House recedes.

The conferees remain very supportive of the use of seasheds and adapters and their continued procurement from small businesses by competitive dual-sourcing through the existing small business program under a stable production plan.

Small boats

The budget request contained $17.2 million for small boats. The House bill would authorize $27.2 million, an increase of $10 million for the purchase of enclosed lifeboats for use on Military Sealift Command ships. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested.

The Senate recedes.

Ship survivability initiative

The conferees agree to an additional authorization of $64 million to the Other Procurement, Navy account for a ship survivability initiative. The recent and tragic attack on U.S.S. Stark in the Persian Gulf in May 1987 highlighted a number of deficiencies in the ability of our ships to fight fires and combat damage of major proportions. The Navy's recent report of its Blue Ribbon Panel on ship survivability highlighted a number of these deficiencies, along with recommendations for corrective actions.

Because this is such an important matter, affecting the lives of the men and women who serve in ships, the conferees recommend this additional authorization to hasten the process of bringing much needed improvements to Navy ships.

The conferees direct that the Navy apply this authorization in the areas of firefighting, damage control, and personnel protection equipment. Among the items to be procurred, all of which were noted for accelerated or additional procurement by the Blue Ribbon Panel, are additional oxygen breathing apparatus and their canisters, thermal imagers, wire-free damage control communications, smoke curtains, exothermic cutters, helmet lights, firefighter overboots, high-capacity fans, and non-sparking mechanical emergency extraction equipment.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives by March 15, 1988 on the allocation and obligation of funds appropriated pursuant to this authorization.

Surface ASW combat system (AN/SQQ-89)

The budget request contained $154.6 million for 8 AN/SQQ-89 surface antisubmarine warfare combat systems. The House bill would authorize the amount requested. The Senate amendment would authorize $234.6 million for 12 systems.

The House recedes.

Improved acoustic processor

The budget request contained no authorization for an improved acoustic processor for use on ships equipped with the LAMPS MK-I antisubmarine warfare system. The House bill would authorize $12 million for this purpose. The Senate amendment would provide no authorization for an improved acoustic processor.

The conferees note that one of the areas of improvement most needed by surface ships is torpedo defense. The first steps in any torpedo defensive system are detection and classification of the threat weapon. The conferees note that one of the possible ways of providing this detection and classification capability in the near term is through modification of equipment currently installed on ships.

Accordingly, the conferees agree to provide authorization in the research and development section of this report for an evaluation of a surface ship torpedo defense modification to the AN/SQR-17A acoustic processor. The conferees further agree that any follow-on procurements that might arise from this effort are to be by competitive means.

The conferees recommend no authorization in the other procurement account for an improved acoustic processor.

AN/BLD-1 interferometer

The budget request contained $6.7 million for 6 AN/BLD-1 interferometers for installation on Los Angeles-class submarines. The House bill would authorize $22.5 million for 9 units plus their ancillary equipment. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested.

The Senate recedes.

Large screen display

The budget request contained no authorization for a large screen plasma display unit for use on board Navy ships. The House bill would authorize $1 million for this purpose. The Senate amendment would provide no authorization.

The Senate recedes.

Five-inch guided projectile

The budget request contained no authorization for the five-inch semi-active laser guided projectile. The House bill would authorize $47 million for the continuation, by competitive dual-source procurement, of this program. The Senate amendment would provide no authorization for this purpose.

The Senate recedes.

MK-92 coherent receiver transmitter (CORT) production kits

The budget request contained no authorization for the coherent receiver transmitter (CORT) modification to the MK-92 fire control system installed on board the FFG-7 class frigates. The House bill would authorize $78 million for 6 systems. The Senate amendment would provide no authorization for this purpose.

The conferees recommend authorization of $78 million for 6 CORT systems. The conferees note a considerable need to upgrade the antiair warfare system on the more than 50 FFG-7 class ships in the fleet today. Information available to the conferees suggests that the only realistic alternative presently available for accomplishing this upgrade is the CORT system. Nonetheless, the conferees are concerned that the unit cost of CORT will make fielding the system throughout the FFG-7 class in a timely manner difficult.

Accordingly, the conferees direct that the Secretary of the Navy provide a report no later than March 15, 1988 to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on ways to reduce the unit cost of the CORT upgrade.

As a related matter, the conferees also direct the Navy to examine promptly other changes to the FFG-7 class frigates that may improve their ability to detect and engage sea-skimming missiles. For example, shipboard radar systems like the SPS-55 surface search radar should be examined to determine if it can be made to detect low, fast-flying cruise missiles.

The Senate recedes.

Reductions and transfers in the other procurement, Navy account

The House bill would provide for reductions of $33.9 million in ship support equipment, $75.1 million in communications and electronics equipment, and $33.4 million in ordnance support equipment. The Senate amendment would provide for undistributed reduction of $173.8 million to the other procurement, Navy account and provide for prior-year transfers of $36.5 million as shown in the accompanying table.

The conferees recommend reductions and transfers as shown in the accompanying table.

MARINE CORPS PROCUREMENT

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $1,402.4 million for Marine Corps procurement in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $1,286.2 million for Marine Corps procurement. The Senate amendment would authorize $1,378.4 million.

The conferees recommend authorization of $1,333.6 million for Navy Marine Corps procurement in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $1,330.5 million at the contingent level for Navy Marine Corps procurement in fiscal year 1988.

Specific program authorizations are detailed in the following table.

ITEM OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Hawk guided missile

The budget request contained $137.0 million for 525 Hawk missiles for fiscal year 1988 and $24.4 million for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989.

The House bill would authorize the amounts requested for fiscal year 1988, provide no authorization for advance procurement for fiscal year 1989 and deny a multiyear procurement request. The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested and approve multiyear procurement.

The conferees reviewed the proposal for multiyear procurement of Hawk missiles and found that the averge cost of the Hawk missiles under a projected multiyear procurement contract exceeds the prices paid for similar missiles on an annual contract during the past two years. The conferees question the plausibility of the Department's projections of the cost of the missile under future annual contracts against which savings under a multiyear contract are projected. Therefore, the conferees included a provision (sec. 108(b)) which permits multiyear contracts for Hawk missiles only if the multiyear contract provides savings of 12 percent from the average of the missiles costs in the previous two fiscal years, adjusted for inflation and quantity. The conferees take this action based on the poor quality of the annual contract projections contained in the Marine Corps' request for multiyear spending authority.

The conferees recommend authorization of $123.0 million for procurement of 525 Hawks in fiscal year 1988, and $14.0 million for advance procurement of Hawk missiles for fiscal year 1989.

AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT, AIR FORCE

OVERVIEW

The budget request for fiscal year 1988 contained authorization of $14,191.4 million for Air Force aircraft procurement. The House bill authorized $11,557.8 million for such procurement. The Senate amendment authorized $13,754.9 million.

The conferees recommend authorization of $13,224.3 million for Air Force aircraft procurement in fiscal year 1988. The conferees recommend a total authorization of $12,689.3 million at the contingent level.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

F-16 fighter aircraft (Falcon)

The budget request contained $2,223.7 million for procurement of 180 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $475.9 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989. The House bill would authorize $2,123.7 million for procurement of 180 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $475.9 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,173.7 million for procurement of 180 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $475.9 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,173.7 million for procurement of 180 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $475.9 million for advance procurement of 180 aircraft in fiscal year 1989.

MC-130H (Combat Talon)

The budget request contained $356.5 million for procurement of 7 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $15.8 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989. The House bill would authorize $309.5 million for procurement of 6 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $15.8 million in advance procurement in fiscal year 1989. The Senate amendment would authorize $329.0 million for procurement of 7 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $15.8 million in advance procurement in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend authorization of $329.0 million for 7 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $15.8 million in advance procurement for 4 aircraft in fiscal year 1989.

AC-130U gunship

The budget request contained $217.8 million for procurement of 5 AC-130U gunship combat aircraft fiscal year 1988. The House bill did not authorize the AC-130U aircraft in fiscal year 1988 but recommended $18.2 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989. The Senate amendment would authorize $236.0 million for 5 AC-130U aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $59.2 million in advance procurement in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend $277.0 million for 5 AC-130U aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $35.3 million in advance procurement for 6 aircraft in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $110.3 million for 1 AC-130U aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $35.3 million in advance procurement for 6 aircraft in fiscal year 1989 at the contingent level.

C-17 tactical airlift aircraft

The budget request contained $617.9 million for procurement of 2 C-17 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $66.3 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989. The House bill would authorize $600.0 million in fiscal year 1988 for 2 aircraft and $66.3 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989. The Senate amendment would authorize $617.9 million for 2 C-17 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $66.3 million for advance procurement in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend authorization of $617.9 million in fiscal year 1988 for 2 aircraft and $66.3 million for advance procurement of 4 aircraft in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $600.0 million for 2 aircraft in fiscal year 1988 and $66.3 million for advance procurement of 4 aircraft in fiscal year 1989 at the contingent level.

C-27 transport aircraft

The budget request contained $65.9 million for procurement of 5 C-27 aircraft in fiscal year 1988. The House bill did not authorize the C-27 transport aircraft in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $65.9 million for 5 C-27 in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend no authorization at this time. This action is without prejudice and is taken because the requirements for the program are not firm.

The conferees understand that several studies are underway that are designed to finalize the program requirements. Once these studies are completed and the requirements are stabilized, the Air Force would be expected to submit a reprogramming request for the C-27.

TR-1 squadron propulsion upgrade

The House bill authorized $10.0 million above the budget request for the test of new engine for the TR-1/U-2 aircraft. The Senate amendment did not provide similar authorization. The conferees agreed to authorize $10 million for exploratory tests only and do not commit to an engine-replacement program at this time. The conferees understand that the funding for the tests is estimated to be approximately $18.0 million and that the Air Force will submit a reprogramming prior to intitiating the program in fiscal year 1988.

Modification of Air Force aircraft

The budget request contained $1,907.6 million for modification of various Air Force aircraft in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $2,202.8 million for Air Force aircraft modifications. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,191.1 million for Air Force aircraft modifications.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,066.9 million for modification of Air Force aircraft in fiscal year 1988 as detailed in the preceding table.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $2,024.7 million for modification of Air Force aircraft in fiscal year 1988 at the contingent level.

TR-1 advanced synthetic aperture radar (ASARS) modification

The conferees agree to authorize $20.0 million for the modification to the existing TR-1 ASARS radars to give the system a moving target indicators (MTI) capability. The conferees believe that the ASARS MTI effort will complement the Joint Surveillance and Target Attack Radar System (JSTARS) and should be available in the near term. The conferees once again stress that the ASARS MTI development is not a substitute for the E-8A Joint STARS.

T/AT-37 aircraft modification

The budget request contained authorization of $12.4 million for modification of the T/AT-37 aircraft. The T-37 is used for undergraduate pilot training. The House bill did not provide authorization. The Senate amendment authorized the requested amount.

The conferees recommend authorization of $12.4 million. Funds may not be obligated, however, before the Secretary of Defense certifies that the modifications are for flight safety purposes.

Also, the Secretary of Defense is required to approve and to submit to the committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a master plan that details the requirements, equipment, costs, schedule and acquisition plans for meeting the undergraduate pilot training requirements for the Department of the Air Force. Also, the resource management plan should address the most cost effective means, including the feasibility of the joint service programs, for meeting the requirements. The plan is to be submitted by February 1, 1988 and should contain the same level of detail as the Air Force fighter roadmap.

KC-135R conversions

The report accompanying the Senate amendment (S. Rept. 100-57) directs the Air Force to examine the savings that would result from a multiyear procurement at a rate of 50 KC-135R conversions per year to the completion of the conversion program. If the potential savings warrant, the Air Force should submit the appropriate legislative request for a multiyear contract for the balance of the program.

The conferees endorse this language.

Close air support aircraft

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 123(b)) that would designate $10 million of fiscal year 1988 funds authorized for Air Force aircraft procurement for the procurement of equipment, facilities and services for the modification of A-7 aircraft under the A-7 plus program. Such funds could not be obligated before the Secretary of Defense certifies to the Congress, in writing, that the A-7 plus program is a cost-effective approach to modernizing close air support and battlefield air interdiction squadrons in the Air Force and the Air National Guard. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend authorization of $10 million. Funds may not be obligated in excess of $10 million until the Secretary of Defense certifies that (1) obligation of funds will not adversely affect full and open competition on the A-7 upgrade program and (2) the upgraded A-7 aircraft is the most cost-effective alternative for modernizing existing close air support assets and battlefield air interdiction and contributing to meeting the requirements relating to close air support established by the Secretary of Defense.

Also, funds may not be obligated unless the required Department of Defense vulnerability study demonstrates that the upgraded A-7 aircraft meets the vulnerability requirements for the aircraft established by the Secretary of Defense.

Finally, funds in excess of $10 million may not be obligated until the Secretary provides a close air support/battlefield air interdiction master plan. That master plan should contain the same level of detail as the Air Force Fighter Roadmap. It is to be submitted not later than October 1, 1988.

Air Force aircraft spares and repair parts

The budget request contained $2,966 million for Air Force aircraft spares and repair parts in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $2,566.5 million for Air Force aircraft spares and repair parts. The Senate amendment would authorize $3,025.1 million for procurement of Air Force aircraft spares and repair parts.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,654.5 million for Air Force aircraft spares and repair parts in fiscal year 1988 as detailed in the preceding table.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $2,647.2 for Air Force aircraft spares and repair parts in fiscal year 1988 at the contingent level.

Air Force aircraft support equipment and facilities

The budget request contained $3,669.1 million for procurement of Air Force aircraft support equipment and facilities in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $2,826.4 million for this purpose. The Senate amendment would authorize $3,898.8 million for Air Force aircraft support equipment and facilities in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $3,857.9 million for such purposes in fiscal year 1988 as detailed in the preceding table.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $3,497.8 million for Air Force aircraft support equipment and facilities at the contingent level.

Common ground equipment

The budget request for fiscal year 1988 contained authorization of $221.3 million for common ground equipment. Included in this amount is $53.3 million for the procurement of 122 ground power generator systems that provide electrical power, compressed air and air conditioning to tactical and strategic aircraft during maintenance and operational functions.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment authorized the requested amount. The conferees have learned that the Air Force intends to conduct a study of the proper mix of various ground power generator systems, including the potential use of a single multi-purpose unit that combines power and cooling capabilities for flight line maintenance. The conferees endorse the study.

Air Force aircraft procurement, prior year savings

The House bill included prior year adjustments of $964.9 million to the Air Force aircraft procurement budget request for fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment provided adjustments of $678.4 million.

The conferees recommend prior year adjustments totaling $796.3 million to fiscal year 1988 Air Force aircraft procurement accounts.

Air Force aircraft procurement, undistributed reduction

The House bill did not include undistributed reductions against the Air Force aircraft procurement account in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment provided for such reductions in the amount of $231.1 million.

The Senate recedes.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

MX advanced intercontinental ballistic missile system

The budget request contained $1,259.9 million for procurement of 21 MX missiles in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $864.0 million for procurement of 12 MX missiles. The Senate amendment would authorize $1,159.9 million for procurement of 21 MX missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $864.0 million for procurement of 12 MX missiles.

The House bill included prior year adjustments of $200 million to the MX missile program. The Senate amendment included $165 million in undistributed adjustments to the Air Force missile procurement budget request for fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend prior year adjustments of $165 million to the MX missile program.

Advanced cruise missile

The budget request contained a classified amount for the procurement of the advanced cruise missile (ACM). The House bill reduced the requested amount by $899.4 million. The Senate amendment reduced the budget request by $200 million.

The conferees recommend authorization for the ACM program that is $510.7 million below the requested amount. The conferees' action reflects the anticipated restructuring of the program because of slower than expected completion of important testing milestones.

The conferees continue to support strongly the advanced cruise missile program. The conferees agreed, however, that the performance of the development program to date cannot justify the planned pace of the program, and therefore agreed to funding levels that would slow the program. They further agreed to measures designed to increase the leverage of the government in achieving the desired level of system and schedule performance. These measures include a provision whereby certain test milestones must be achieved by a date certain or the government must contract with a second source. Should the test milestones be achieved, the government could either award an incentive option to the existing contractor, or contract with a second source, depending on the government's evaluation of the existing contractor's ability to meet program objectives.

Further details of the conferees actions are contained in the classified statement of managers.

AIM-7F/M Sparrow

The budget request contained $99.5 million for procurement of 558 Sparrow missiles in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $134.5 million for procurement of 758 Sparrow missiles in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested for 558 Sparrow missiles.

The conferees recommend authorization of $134.5 million for procurement of 758 AIM-7F/M Sparrow missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend total authorization of $117.0 million for 658 AIM-7F/M Sparrow missiles in fiscal year 1988 at the contingent level.

AIM-9L-M Sidewinder

The budget request contained $53.1 million for procurement of 956 AIM-9L/M Sidewinder missiles in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $69.1 million for procurement of 1,256 Sparrow missiles in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize the amount requested for procurement of 596 missiles.

The conferees recommend $69.1 million for procurement of 1256 missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend total authorization of $53.1 million for procurement of 956 missiles in fiscal year 1988 at the contingent level.

AGM-130 Powered GBU-15

The budget request contained $43.8 million for procurement of 121 AGM powered GBU-15 missiles in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $26.4 million for procurement of 73 AGM powered GBU-15 missiles. The Senate amendment did not authorize the program in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend no authorization in fiscal year 1988 for the AGM-130 powered GBU-15 missile program.

AGM-65D Maverick

The budget request contained $354.6 million for procurement of 2,100 AGM-65D Maverick missiles in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $325.0 million for procurement of 2,100 Maverick missiles in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $325.0 million for procurement of 2,100 Maverick missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $325.0 million for procurement of 2,100 Maverick missiles in fiscal year 1988.

AGM-88A HARM

The budget request contained $422.9 million for procurement of 1,738 AGM-88A HARM missiles in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $402.7 million for procurement of 1,748 HARM missiles in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $402.7 million for procurement of 1,748 HARM missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $402.7 million for procurement of 1,748 AGM-88A HARM missiles in fiscal year 1988.

Advanced medium range air-to-air missile (AMRAAM)

The budget request contained $832.9 million for procurement of 630 AMRAAM missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The House bill would authorize $680.8 million for procurement of 500 AMRAAM missiles in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $832.9 million for procurement of 630 AMRAAM missiles in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $743.1 million for procurement of 500 AMRAAM missiles in fiscal year 1988.

Ground launched cruise missile

The budget request contained $70.8 million for procurement of 37 ground launched cruise missiles and $15.4 million for GLCM modifications in fiscal year 1988. The House bill did not authorize the ground launched cruise missile program in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $70.8 for procurement of 37 ground launched cruise missiles and $15.4 million for GLCM mods in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees agreed to provide no authorization for ground launched cruise missile procurement. This action was not taken in anticipation of an arms control agreement to eliminate this class of missiles, but rather in recognition of the fact that all missiles required to support planned GLCM deployments have already been procured. The requested missiles were pipeline spares that would be part of the maintenance float. The conferees believe that support requirements, in the absence of a treaty, could be provided for in subsequent budget submissions.

Flare IR (B-1B)

The budget request contained authorization of $2.0 million in fiscal year 1988 for the procurement of flares for the B-1B bomber. The House bill did not provide authorization. The Senate amendment contained the requested amount.

The conferees recommend no authorization at this time. The action is taken without prejudice. Once the remaining qualification tests are completed and the flare ejector/dispenser problems are resolved, the conferees would invite the Air Force to initiate a reprogramming action.

Mobile armored reconnaissance vehicle

The budget request contained authorization of $22.0 million for the procurement of 45 mobile armored reconnaissance vehicles (MARV). The House bill did not authorize the program. The Senate amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The conferees support this high priority item for air base operability and recommend authorization of $5.0 million for the MARV program for fiscal year 1988 with the remaining $17.0 million authorized in fiscal year 1989. Based on the Air Force development and acquisition plans, the recommended authorization for fiscal year 1988 will provide sufficient funding to initiate procurement of long lead items consistent with the current MARV production schedule.

Cheyenne mountain complex

The budget request contained authorization of $18.2 million in fiscal year 1988 for the Cheyenne Mountain Complex communications electronics procurement program. Included in this amount is $8.5 million to procure a base security system for the space defense system (ASAT) facilities at Langley Air Force Base, Virginia and computers for the mission control system.

The House bill did not authorize the space defense system related funding request of $8.5 million. The Senate amendment authorized the requested amount.

The conferees recommend no authorization at this time for the ASAT facilities. The action is taken without prejudice, pending resolution of a decision to restructure the space defense system program. The conferees would expect the Air Force to submit a reprogramming request to initiate procurement if the required equipment is consistent with the restructured program.

Weapons storage and security systems

The Senate amendment contained $25.3 million in procurement and $13.9 million in military construction associated with installation of weapons storage and security systems (WSSS) at three locations. The House bill contained no authorization for this purpose because of a concern for recoupment from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) of U.S. prefinancing of these systems.

The conferees agreed to provide the full amount requested under conditions set for the in section 1024 of the bill. These conditions include a prohibition on the expenditure of funds to install WSS systems until the Secretary of Defense certifies that the program has accomplished the NATO eligibility milestone. At the time of the above certification, the Secretary must also provide a plan for the installation of WSS systems that reflects the additional requirements, if any, resulting from an intermediate range nuclear forces treaty. The Secretary must also provide the key milestones for WSS system contracting and NATO financing and certify that all available steps are being taken to accelerate NATO agreement on a final recoupment plan.

Air Force other procurement, undistributed reduction

The House bill did not include undistributed reductions against the Air Force other procurement account in fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment provided for such reductions in the amount of $320.0 million.

The conferees recommend no undistributed reductions in fiscal year 1988 against the other procurement account.

PROCUREMENT, DEFENSE AGENCIES

OVERVIEW

The budget request contained $1,292.4 million for Defense Agencies procurement in fiscal year 1988. The House bill would authorize $1,240.3 million for Defense Agencies. The Senate amendment would authorize $1,276.9 million for Defense Agencies.

The conferees recommend authorization of $1,293.3 million for Defense Agencies in fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $1,288.4 million at the contingent level for Defense Agencies in fiscal year 1988.

ITEM OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Reverse engineering of Warsaw Pact components

The conferees have learned that several third world countries which previously had close relations with the Soviet Union are required to procure spare parts from the Warsaw Pact, even though they procure those replacement parts from other parties. The conferees understand that United States companies have the ability to "reverse engineer" those components and manufacture replacement parts that can be sold to third world countries operating Warsaw Pact equipment. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to provide an assessment, not later than April 1, 1988, of the prospect for a program of reverse engineering for purposes of manufacturing replacement components for Warsaw Pact equipment.

NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVE FORCES

OVERVIEW

The House bill would authorize $596.5 million above the requested amount of $2.2 billion for procurement of equipment for the National Guard and Reserve forces. The Senate amendment would authorize $300 million above the request for the same purpose.

The conferees agreed to authorize $703 million above the amounts requested for procurement of equipment for the National Guard and Reserves.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $638 million at the contingent level for procurement of equipment in fiscal year 1988.

The following table summarizes the conferees' recommendation reflecting the continuing commitment to the Guard and Reserve forces modernization.

FISCAL YEAR 1989 AUTHORIZATION

As part of its initiative to stabilize the defense acquisition process, the conferees recommend two-year authorization for selected programs. The following table displays authorization of these programs for fiscal year 1989.

The conferees recommend authorization of these programs because of a demonstrated requirement, their stability and their maturity.

Legislative Provisions

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Milestone authorizations for procurement (sec. 106)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 131) that would establish milestone authorizations for five major acquisition systems: the Army's Mobile Subscriber Equipment system and the Tactical Missile System; the Navy's Trident II Missile and T-45 aircraft training system; and the Air Force's Medium Launch Vehicle program. In each instance where appropriate, authorization would be provided to complete development. Procurement authorization would be provided for up to five years.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to designate the following systems for milestone authorization:

Service	System
Army	Mobile Subscriber Equipment System. Tactical Missile System.
Navy	T-45 Aircraft Training System. Trident II (D-5) Missile Program.

Multiyear provisions for the Army (sec. 108(a))

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 101(b)) that would provide the authority for the Secretary of the Army to enter into multiyear contracts for the High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle (HMMWV) and the AN/ALQ-136 jammer only if the multiyear contract provides not less than 12 percent savings as compared to the same program executed with annual contracts.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 132(a)) that would provide the authority for the Secretary of the Army to enter into multiyear contracts for the High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle, the TOW 2 missile, and the AN/ALQ-136 jammer. The Senate amendment would also restrict this authority unless such a contract provides not less than 12 percent savings.

The conferees agreed to provide the authority for the Secretary of the Army to enter into multiyear contracts for the following: the High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle; the TOW 2 missile; and the AN/ALQ-136 jammer. This authority would be provided only if such a contract provides not less than 12 percent savings as compared to the same program executed with annual contracts.

The House recedes.

Extension of authority provided secretary of defense in connection with the NATO AWACS program (sec. 109)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 107) that would extend to fiscal year 1988 the provisions of section 103(a) of the fiscal year 1982 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 97-86) to provide certain waiver authority in carrying out Multilateral Memoranda of Understanding between the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) Ministers of Defense on the NATO E-3A early warning aircraft cooperative program. The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 106) that would provide permanent extension of such authority.

The Senate recedes.

Stinger multiyear procurement (sec. 111(b))

The fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) contained a provision (sec. 107(e)) prohibiting the Army from entering into a multiyear contract to procure Stinger air defense missiles until the Secretary of the Army had solicited proposals for competitive procurement of Stinger missiles and found the multiyear contract approach to result in lower overall costs. The Army has requested permission to proceed with a three-year multiyear contract for Stinger missiles and intends to open the program to competition starting in fiscal year 1990.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 121(b)) that would repeal section 107(e) of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act because the Army's acquisition approach achieved the advantages sought in the original provision for both multiyear contracting and competitive procurement. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to repeal section 107(e) of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act. The House recedes.

Land-based tankers (sec. 112(c))

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 122(b)) that would prohibit procurement of land-based tanker aircraft for the Navy unless the Secretary of Defense certifies to Congress that the Department of the Air Force and the Department of the Navy will not enter into a memorandum of agreement regarding Air Force support of Navy land-based tanker requirements.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to include a provision (sec. 112) that would prohibit land-based tanker aircraft for the Navy unless the Secretary of Defense certifies that the Air Force cannot support the land-based tanker requirements of the Navy.

The House recedes with an amendment.

On-board oxygen generating systems (OBOGS) (sec. 112(d))

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 110) that would restrict authorization for procurement of the A-6F, F-14D and FA-18 aircraft to those fitted with an on-board oxygen generating system.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to include a provision (sec. 112) that would limit procurement of F-14D and FA-18 aircraft to those configured to incorporate an on-board oxygen generating system.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Lease or charter of new tankers (sec. 112(e))

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 122(c)) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to enter into long-term leases and charters for militarily useful tanker vessels constructed in the United States, subject to section 2401 of title 10, United States Code. The provision would neither modify nor satisfy the requirements set forth in existing law relating to entry into contracts for long-term leases and charters of naval vessels.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees believe that, for the purposes of this provision, the term "constructed in the United States" should be construed to mean that—

(1) all major components of the hull and superstructure of the vessel are fabricated in the United States;

(2) the vessel is assembled entirely in the United States; and

(3) at least 50 percent of the total cost of all major items of machinery (including propulsion) and components which are not an integral part of the hull or superstructure of the vessel is of United States origin.

T-46 trainer aircraft (sec. 113(a))

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 110(a)) that would authorize the transfer of prior year funds in the amount of $300.0 million for naval aviation programs that were previously available for the now terminated T-46A trainer aircraft program. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to authorize the transfer of $300 million in prior year funds for naval aviation programs that were previously available for the terminated T-46A trainer aircraft program.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 123) that would release the Air Force from having to comply with any statutory requirements to conduct a competition for trainer aircraft. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to include a provision (sec. 113(a)(4)) that prohibits the obligation of fiscal year 1986 and 1987 funds for additional T-46 trainer aircraft beyond those contracted for on the date of enactment of the fiscal year 1988 National Defense Authorization Act or in connection with a competition for trainer aircraft.

Transfer of Other Procurement, Air Force, prior year funds to Navy Other Procurement (sec. 113(b))

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 110(b)) that would authorize transfer of prior year funds in the amount of $8.0 million for Navy munitions that were previously available for the Air Force BDU-50 practice bombs. The funds authorized to be transferred to the Navy would be for the procurement of the BDU-45 practice bomb. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Reauthorization of fiscal year 1985 research, development and engineering funds, Air Force, for procurement of the PAVE Tiger system (sec. 113(c))

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 110(c)) that would authorize the transfer and use of fiscal year 1985 research, development and engineering funds, Air Force, in the amount of $95.8 million for the procurement of the PAVE Tiger system. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend authorization of $95.8 million for the PAVE Tiger system. The conferees recommend authorization of $45.8 million for the PAVE Tiger system at the contingent level.

Limitation on obligation of funds for certain transport aircraft without ground collision avoidance systems (sec. 113(d))

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 110(e)) that would require the incorporation of the ground collision avoidance system in transport aircraft procured or modified with fiscal year 1988 funds. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

Certain aircraft would be excluded from the requirements of section 113(d). Specifically, aircraft for special operations forces, aircraft that are equipped with comparable or superior collision avoidance capabilities, or aircraft currently undergoing modifications where interruption of schedule would result in either increased costs or production breaks would be excluded.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a plan to comply with the requirements in section 113(d). The plan should be submitted no later than February 1, 1988.

Cost, performance and management initiative for the Advanced Technology Bomber (sec. 121)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 114) that would direct the Secretary of Defense acting through the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition) to establish ongoing competition within the Advanced Technology Bomber (ATB) program, require reports on the expected capabilities of the Advanced Technology Bomber at its initial operational capability and annual developmental and operational testing, establish selected acquisition reports, and other purposes.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would establish a cost, performance and management initiative for the Advanced Technology Bomber program. The conferees carefully reviewed the House initiative focusing on a competition initiative to maintain cost and management discipline within the ATB program. Additionally, the conferees had the opportunity to review data on the competition initiative prepared by the office of the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition). On the basis of that review, the conferees strongly agreed that an initiative directed toward maintaining cost, performance and management discipline within the ATB program was justified. In developing the cost, performance and management initiative, the USD(A) is directed to establish a program management plan for evaluating and supporting program production decisions. The program management plan should be linked to progress in meeting specified program milestones, including testing. In addition to the program management plan, the USD(A) is directed to stimulate greater interaction between the program prine contractor and major subcontractors on management and system performance issues. The conferees are concerned that the capability and talent of the major subcontractors are not being fully utilized on critical development and production issues. The initiative further requires the USD(A) to establish a senior management review group, utilize ongoing competition, prepare a statement on the expected capability of the ATB at its IOC, and require selected acquisition reports for the program. The conferees further agree that up to $10,000,000 in funds available in fiscal year 1988 for Air Force aircraft procurement are to be made available to the USD(A) to implement the cost, performance and management initiative. No later than April 1, 1988, the Secretary of Defense, in conjunction with the USD(A) shall submit a report on the cost, performance and management initiative to the appropriate defense committees. No funds may be obligated for the ATB program after October 1, 1988 unless the cost, performance and management initiative is implemented.

Report on condition of certain C-130 aircraft (sec. 122)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 111) that would authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to (1) inspect the eight C-130E aircraft stored since 1974 at Air Force Plant No. 6 in Marietta, Georgia, in order to determine the current conditions and the work required to return such aircraft to operating status and (2) report his findings, including cost estimates, to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives within 60 days after enactment of the fiscal year 1988 Defense Authorization Act. The Senate contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Procurement of automatic injectors for chemical weapons antidote (sec. 124)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 115) that would restrict the procurement of automatic injectors for chemical weapons antidote to domestic sources unless the Secretary of Defense determines that procurement from additional sources is critical to U.S. national security.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify that the Secretary of Defense, through the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, determines the critical nature of the second source requirement and would eliminate the requirement that a company must have executed a Department of Defense Form 1519 to be eligible as a supplier.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Prohibition of funding for the mechanical diverters program

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 103(b)) that would prohibit the Air Force from obligating funds in the amount of $9.8 million of other procurement funds, Air Force, for the procurement of mechanical diverters, a conventional weapons storage program. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to not include such a provision in the conference agreement. However, the conferees agreed that fiscal year 1988 funding for the mechanical diverters program is not required. The tables detailing the Air Force other procurement accounts have been adjusted to reflect this action.

Lightweight Tacfire/Advanced Field Artillery Tactical Data System (AFATDS)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 121(e)) that would prohibit obligation of funds for the acquisition of the Lightweight TACFIRE field artillery system. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees affirm their support for the Army's current approach for providing fire support automation that meets the Army's requirements for both light and heavy forces. The conferees understand that the Army's current approach is to proceed with the Advanced Field Artillery Tactical Data System (AFATDS) as the only system that can meet current automation requirements with the growth potential to accommodate future fire support systems. Furthermore, the AFATDS is part of the Army Command and Control System (ACCS) which will fully automate the battlefield command and control functions on an integrated basis. The conferees support the Army's AFATDS and ACCS programs which will use a common hardware and software combination with a controlled, DoD standard, programming language (Ada) as a way to reduce dependence on costly, dedicated computer and software solutions.

TITLE II—RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST AND EVALUATION (RDT&E)

GENERAL

The Administration requested a total authorization of $43,718.937 milion for fiscal year 1988 and $44,202.684 million for fical year 1989 Research, Development, Test and Evaluation (RDT&E) appropriations. The conferees agreed on a total authorization of $40,511.225 million for fiscal year 1988 and $11,284.953 million for fiscal year 1989 RDT&E program, a reduction of $3,207.712 million in fiscal year 1988 and $32,917.731 million in fiscal year 1989 from the Administration's request.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $38,283.226 million at the contingent level.

Acoustic processor/torpedo defense/AN/SQR-17A

The conferees recommend an authorization for the torpedo defense program development, of an amount not to exceed $12.0 million to be authorized only to modify two SQR-17A acoustic processors to incorporate a torpedo detection capability and test and evaluate for fleet usage.

AGM-130

The Administration requested $40.775 million for continued development of the AGM-130 powered bomb, data link and aircraft integration. The House bill would authorize the requested amount.

The conferees have learned of serious problems plaguing the AGM-130. None of the flight tests has performed successfully. In June the Air Force suspended all payments to the contractor and issued a notice of its intent to terminate the program. The contractor offered to finance continued development of the AGM-130 until they successfully demonstrate that the design is reliable and performs to meet specifications.

The conferees note that the Air Force has a pressing requirement for this capability. The AGM-130 is designed to provide pinpoint accuracy for a very large bomb, with the launching aircraft remaining at a substantial stand-off distance to improve its survivability.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $10.0 million to pay for Air Force monitoring of the contractor's efforts, data link improvements and aircraft integration. The conferees would welcome a reprogramming should those tests prove successful and the Air Force determine the program is ready for procurement.

The conferees recommend no authorization at the contingent level.

Air defense initiative

The House bill would authorize $42.139 million for Navy and Air Force programs associated with the Air Defense Initiative (ADI). The Senate amendment would authorize $66.256 million and a classified amount for these programs.

The conferees agree that there should be coordination of ADI programs under the Office of the Secretary of Defense and agree to fund this initiative at $96.7 million in fiscal year 1988, $30.0 million of which is to be available to the Navy for ADI programs.

The conferees agree that all Air Force programs related to the Air Defense Initiative should be consolidated under a single Air Force program element. In addition, the Secretary of Defense should consider consolidation of the Navy and Air Force programs under a single program element in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and is directed to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than March 1, 1988, a plan for the conduct of the Air Defense Initiative that includes the allocation of resources by technology area for fiscal years 1988 and 1989.

The conferees would expect consolidation of ADI related programs to result in a better balancing of the technology objectives of the ADI program and to facilitate the incorporation of technologies resident in other programs as well as including capabilities resident in other services, such as the Coast Guard. As in previous years, the conferees believe that the focus of the near-term ADI program should be on surveillance technologies.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $65.0 million at the contingent level.

Air Force aircraft

The conferees recommend authorization of $536.0 million for the Advanced Tactical Fighter and $1,170.0 million in authorization for the C-17 aircraft. At the contingent level, the conferees recommend authorization of $508.0 million and $874.9 million, respectively for these aircraft.

The conferees understand that at the contingent level contracts for both programs may require renegotiation. In this instance, the Air Force may submit a reprogramming in accordance with established procedures in order to obviate termination of existing contracts. The conferees emphasize, however, that this flexibility does not constitute a priori approval of such a reprogramming request.

Common Aircraft Electronic/Avionic Architecture

The conferees want to be assured that the next generation of aircraft are configured with a common electronics/avionics architecture. The ever-increasing proliferation of aircraft electronic components must be reduced through a unified effort on the part of all three services. The conferees are particularly interested in seeing this commonality among the ATF, ATA and LHX. Upcoming Department of Defense budget submissions on these aircraft will not be favorably considered if there is not a continued, concerted effort to achieve the highest level of commonality in this area.

Defense manufacturing initiative

The House would authorize $25.0 million in the Semiconductor Manufacturing Technology account. The House included an authorization of $5.0 million within the Air Force Industrial Preparedness account for the National Center for Manufacturing Sciences (NOMS).

The Senate amendment would authorize $150.0 million in fiscal year 1988 for a Defense Manufacturing Initiative, with $100.0 million to be placed in an account entitled Manufacturing Technology Initiative within the Office of the Secretary of Defense. The remaining $50.0 million would be placed in the Semiconductor Manufacturing Technology account resulting in a total recommended authorization in this account of $100.0 million. This $100.0 million was to be used for SEMATECH, a consortium of semiconductor manufacturers, materials manufacturers, and equipment manufacturers. The Senate amendment would also authorize $210.0 million in fiscal year 1989 for the Defense Manufacturing Initiative with $50.0 million placed in the Semiconductor Technology account and $160 million in the Manufacturing Technology Initiative account.

The Senate report on S. 1174 (S. Rept. 100-57) contained language directing that of the $100.0 million in the Manufacturing Technology Initiative account, $50.0 million was to be provided to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) for generic manufacturing technology programs. Of the remaining $50.0 million in this account, $5.0 million was made available to provide support for the NOMS.

The conferees agree to an authorization of $95.0 million dollars in fiscal year 1988 and $160.0 million in fiscal year 1989 for the Manufacturing Technology Initiative account within the Office of the Secretary of Defense and direct the Department to provide $50.0 million of the $95.0 million fiscal year 1988 to DARPA for generic manufacturing technology programs. The remaining $45.0 million is directed to an account in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Production and Logistics. Of this $45.0 million, $5.0 million is available to provide support for NOMS. The House bill provision specifying $5.0 million within the Air Force Industrial Preparedness account is deleted. The conferees further agreed to recommend an authorization of $100.0 million for the Semiconductor Manufacturing Technology account ($50.0 million above the requested level), and direct that this be used for SEMATECH.

The conferees agree that a strong, competitive defense industrial base is a key component of a strong national defense. They further expressed concern that this base has seriously eroded and is losing its ability to provide the technologically and qualitatively superior systems needed, at affordable costs, to meet the numerically superior threat posed by U.S. adversaries. This concern is heightened by the narrowing technology lead the United States has over its principal adversary, the Soviet Union.

The conferees are aware of a major industrial base initiate directed by the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Production and Logistics and commends the Assistant Secretary for recognizing and taking action to resolve a major issue confronting the nation. The conferees fully support the initiative and plan to follow carefully its progress. In light of the priority the conferees place on sustaining a strong industrial base, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to provide to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives by February 1, 1988 an interim report on the initiative to include, as a minimum, a summary of the problems facing the defense industrial base and the recommended action plan for solving these problems.

Enhanced space warning

The conferees support the Administration's request to initiate work on an enhanced space warning capability. In so doing, however, the conferees wish to have a clear understanding of the requirements that justify the major investment that will be needed to develop, produce and deploy a follow-on to the current early warning system.

By February 1, 1988, the Office of the Secretary of Defense, with the coordination of the Office of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force, is directed to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the following:

(1) The requirements for a space-based Tactical Warning and Attack Assessment (TW/AA) system independent of any Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) requirements.

(2) The capability of the current system to meet these requirements and/or the cost and schedule associated with modifications to meet these requirements.

(3) The additional SDI requirements associated with TW/AA.

(4) Current system modifications that could be made to meet the SDI requirements and their associated cost and schedule.

(5) The characteristics of the new system required to meet the combined TW/AA and SDI needs, associated cost and schedule to develop and deploy such a system, and how the new system will be phased in and the current system phased out over time.

Fast sealift initiative

The conferees recognize existing shortfalls of a serious nature in strategic sealift, particularly with respect to sealift for rapid reinforcement of U.S. forces or our allies in time of crisis, and recommend authorization of $5.0 million in the Navy's Ship Development account (P.E. 63564N) specifically for an initiative to identify for acquisition or design fast sealift ships with sustained speeds greater than 30 knots and with rapid on-load and off-load capabilities. The Navy is directed to survey the international used shipping market to examine the feasibility of converting existing ships to a configuration similar to the fast sealift ships procured in the past, known as SL-7's. Should any such ships exist which can economically be converted to a configuration similar to SL-7's, the Navy is directed to report such to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives along with an evaluation of acquisition costs. If no such existing ships are available on the international market, the Navy is directed to begin design of new construction ships. This initiative may include investigation and development of advanced hullform technology including the surface effect ship. The committees will consider reprogramming funds for the design of new ships in fiscal year 1989.

Follow-on Tactical Air Reconnaissance System

The House bill would authorize $40.561 million for the Follow-On Tactical Air Reconnaissance System (FOTARS) and stated in the House report (H. Rept. 100-58) that the committee did not endorse the electro-optical data link for the RF-4C reconnaissance aircraft. The Senate amendment contained no similar reference. The conferees agree to authorize $47.0 million for FOTARS with the understanding that the RF-4C upgrade will not be initiated unless it is justified and specifically authorized. The conferees agree that a more survivable penetrating reconnaissance aircraft should be developed.

Forward Area Air Defense

The conferees recommend that funds authorized for the Line of Sight Forward-Heavy air defense system (program element 63757A), are available for the acquisition of systems for operational testing as well as the conduct of such testing.

Fuel system inerting

The conferees remain concerned over the survivability and safety of the Army's tracked and wheeled vehicles. Although progress is being made, much remains to be done. The fuel tanks of military aircraft have for many years been protected with passive, multiple-hit inerting systems. The conferees are advised that no comparable use of such inerting systems exist with the fuel systems of vehicles.

Accordingly, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to examine the use of passive, multiple-hit inerting systems in tracked and wheeled vehicles. The Secretary should report the conclusions of his study together with any recommendations to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than June 30, 1988.

Joint Surveillance and Target Acquisition Radar System (JSTARS)

The Administration requested $337.9 million for continued development of the Joint Surveillance and Target Acquisition Radar System (JSTARS).

The House bill would authorize $200.0 million. The Senate amendment would authorize $376.9 million, with the additional $39.0 million provided for purposes of acquiring a third test aircraft for the full scale development program.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $376.9 million, and authorize the Air Force to procure the third development aircraft.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $347.9 at the contingent level. The conferees authorize purchase of the third aircraft at the contingent level, though the conferees expect the Air Force to provide the remaining funds within the development program.

Lightweight portable mine-hunting sonar

Neither the House bill or the Senate amendment provided authorization to develop a low cost, lightweight mine-hunting sonar system.

Subsequent to the fiscal year 1988 budget request, the recent events in the Persian Gulf has clearly demonstrated the need for improved mine countermeasure capabilities. The Navy has initiated a program for building ocean-going and river and harbor minesweepers and to procure additional mine sweeping helicopters. The conferees recognize, however, that the planned force level for these systems will not be adequate to meet our requirements in many plausible contingencies.

The conferees, therefore, recommend authorization of $2.0 million from the Navy's Surface Mine Countermeasures program to develop a lightweight mine-hunting sonar which could be adapted to existing Navy and Coast Guard vessels.

National Test Facility

The Administration requested $100.0 million for construction of a National Test Facility at Falcon Air Force Station, Colorado. The conferees have determined that this complex is more properly funded by research and development funds, rather than military construction.

The conferees recommend an authorization of up to $70.0 million for the planning and construction of this facility. This authorization is to be within the total authorization of the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization, RDT&E account.

Night Vision Investigations

The Army requested $22.584 million for the night vision investigations program. The House bill and the Senate amendment both recommended authorization of the full request.

Subsequently, the conferees during deliberations on the Army's Light Helicopter Experimental (LHX) system were advised that the focal plane array detector research and development program that is required by the LHX and numerous other systems to include the Advanced Anti-armor Weapon System that the night visions program was underfunded and the detectors would not be available in time to support the major weapon systems under development by all the services.

Accordingly, the conferees provide additional authorization of $5.0 million to the request to maintain the schedule of the night vision investigations program.

Noncooperative identification friend or foe (NCIFF)

The conferees support the fielding of Noncooperative Identification Friend or Foe (NCIFF) for air defense missile systems as an urgent need to upgrade the capabilities of these systems on the battlefield in order to reduce the potential for shooting down friendly aircraft.

The conferees understand that there is at least one system that has completed advanced development and is suitable for use with ground-launched air defense missiles ready for full-scale engineering development and early production for use with the presently developed HAWK missile system and the PATRIOT missile system which will succeed it.

The conferees urge the Army to consider entering into a full-scale engineering development of a NCIFF system and appropriate interface electronics to interface with the latest model of the HAWK system tracking radar, and Patriot system.

Pave Runner

The House bill reduced the Air Force request for authorization for the Pave Runner program by $32.689 million while the Senate amendment would authorize the full request.

The House reduction was made without prejudice. Additional information is included in the classified annex.

Point defense integration

The conferees understand the Navy is considering a rapid prototyping initiative to integrate surface combatant stand-alone point defense hardkill and softkill systems into a single, coordinated ship system. The individual systems (e.g., CIWS, SLQ-32, RBOC) would work together in optimum fashion to defeat especially stressful threats exemplified by anti-ship missiles such as EXOCET. The conferees strongly encourage this initiative which would provide an at-sea prototype system in approximately six months. Accordingly, $4.0 million is provided only for this rapid at-sea prototyping. A status report to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives should be provided prior to March 1, 1988.

Portable lightweight sonar

Neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment contained any authorization for the development of a low-frequency lightweight portable sonar system.

The Coast Guard has anti-submarine warfare (ASW) responsibilities in the Maritime Defense Zone in time of war. To date, however, the Coast Guard has not had the equipment necessary to carry out this mission, should the need arise. Procurement of a low-frequency, lightweight portable sonar system would provide a significant shallow water ASW capability for a wide range of Coast Guard vessels.

The conferees direct the Navy to make available up to $2.5 million from the Surface Anti-Submarine Warfare (ASW) program and up to $2.5 million from the Navy's Air Defense initiative program for development, test and evaluation of a full-scale, low-frequency, lightweight, portable sonar system suitable for use by Coast Guard vessels.

The conferees intend for the Navy and the Coast Guard to work together on this program. Furthermore, the conferees authorize the Navy to transfer, from the $5.0 million, such funds as may be necessary to the Coast Guard; and the conferees expect the Coast Guard to make available one or more vessels for support of this program. This development and evaluation program should be based on existing engineering prototype candidate systems.

Finally, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to keep the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives apprised of the progress of this program.

Recovery vehicle competition

The House report (H. Rept. 100-58) contained a directive that the Army conduct a competition between an improved version of the M88 recovery vehicle and a newly designed recovery vehicle based on the chassis of the M1 tank, known as the ARV-90. The Senate report contained no similar direction.

The conferees find that a side-by-side competition between the M88 and ARV-90 should produce a better recovery vehicle program for the Army. The committee is concerned that the Army's current plans do not represent a true competition.

The conferees, however, do not want to delay more than necessary the fielding of a new recovery vehicle.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to complete the following actions: (1) Conduct a side-by-side competition of the M88 and the ARV-90 using an equal number of vehicles though not more than two vehicles for each. The test on the two types of vehicles should be conducted concurrently at the same facilities over the same range of conditions. The tests must begin by July 1, 1988, and be concluded no later than November 1, 1988. Both vehicles should be evaluated in terms of how well they satisfy the M88 product improvement-required operational capabilities, and how well they meet the draft RV-90 required operational capabilities; (2) Solicit proposals for production of both vehicles with firm fix price quotes for an equal quantity of vehicles over a three year period plus not-to-exceed cost estimates for the balance of the program, (3) Review the performance demonstrated in the side-by-side competition, and make a recommendation to the Secretary of Defense not later than December 15, 1988.

Not later than December 31, 1988, the Secretary of Defense is to report to the Congress (a) which required operational capability is adequate to meet Army requirements, and (b) which recovery vehicle he has directed the Army to procure. The Secretary is also to transmit a copy of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Army.

The conferees emphasize that the Army's choice of vehicles is to constitute a long-term and not an interim solution to recovery vehicle requirements.

Remotely piloted vehicles (defense wide)

The Administration requested authorization in the service accounts for continued research and development of remotely piloted vehicles (RPVs) programs. The House bill would reduce the requested levels and authorize $25.0 million to the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence for the development of the most promising technologies which would benefit all the services.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree that RPVs present significant potential to provide reconnaissance, surveilliance, targeting and laser designation support to the armed services. The conferees believe, however, that the Department of Defense is not pursuing a development and acquisition strategy which would provide commonality among systems to include platforms, sensors and ground control and exploitation stations.

The conferees agree to authorize $32.0 million in Defense Agencies account for the development of common components and subsystems for RPVs. $2.0 million would be authorized specifically to examine the feasibility of a common test, evaluation and training center for the Department of Defense RPV programs. Such a center would have the responsibility for testing and evaluating all sub-systems for potential use in the RPV environment and for providing the results to the individual services to enhance their acquisition decisions.

The conferees expect a standardization of test and evaluation procedures that will ensure fair, open competition among the many contractors who have capabilities to support the advancement of RPV technologies.

The conferees encourage the Department of Defense to view RPV technologies as an emerging capability which would provide cost effective alternatives to current capabilities. Operational concepts, fielding plans, force structure, and training and logistics requirements must be considered as the department merges and manages all the independent service RPV initiatives.

Remotely piloted vehicles (Army)

The Administration requested $11.546 million in the Army for development of remotely piloted vehicle (RPV) programs. The House bill would authorize $5.546 million in the Army's account and $32.0 million in an Office of the Secretary of Defense-managed centralized account for the development of RPV subsystems which are common to all the services' requirements.

The Senate amendment would authorize the program at the requested level.

The conferees agree that the funds authorized in the Army's account should be expended for the accelerated development of an Unmanned Aerial Vehicle for Maneuver.

Revolution at sea-ship development

The conferees agree to provide $5.0 million for continued research and development of high-leverage technologies and concepts identified in the Revolution at Sea studies. The goal fo Revolution at Sea is to develop a surface combatant for the 21st Century which is significantly enhanced in combat effectiveness, manpower efficiency and has increased capability to deliver more ordance on target. These goals should be met through a strongly cooperative research, development, test and evaluation program involving Navy, industry and academia.

Space nuclear power

The conferees concur with the House of Representatives position that space nuclear reactor systems based on thermionics technology offer great promise for fulfilling megawatt and lower power requirements while placing less stringent demands on nuclear fuels. More specifically, thermionic technology may enable the development of space power systems that are safe, reliable, lightweight, compact and survivable. The conferees are concerned, however, that thermionics technology is not adequately funded within the budget for the space power program. Accordingly, the conferees direct that not less than $10.0 million of the amounts appropriated for the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) for space power programs be expended only for therminoics technology development including the development of technology for applications below 25 kilowatts.

Standard embedded computer

The House bill reduced the Navy's request for authorization of $29.397 million to $1.110 million; the Senate amendment would authorize the full request.

In 1984, the Under Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering provided a service coordinated plan to the Congress to phase out embedded computers such as the Air Force Military Standard 1750, the Navy UYK-43/44 and AYK-14 computers, and the vast inventory of Army computers. The plan further delineated the approach to bring next generation technology including mainframe on a chip into future weapons and support systems as early as possible. Subsequently, the services have underfunded the next generation computer projects and appear to be committed to keeping current generation computer technology in our weapons systems. The Navy for example has requested less than $1.0 million for the fiscal year 1988 program.

The conferees direct the services to adhere to the plan to bring next generation computer technology into our weapons systems and accordingly, deleted all Navy authorization for product improvement of current embedded computer systems. The authorization of $1.110 million is intended for the next generation computer project.

Strategic relocatable target capability

The Senate amendment would authorize $16.459 million for the Air Force and $6.7 million for the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) for research and development associated with strategic relocatable targets. The House bill would provide no authorization for the Air Force, and $6.7 million for DARPA.

The conferees agree to authorize $10.0 million for the Air Force and $5.0 million for DARPA to pursue technologies related to relocatable target capability. The conferees note the potential of these efforts to benefit substantially from the many related efforts, including intelligence programs and especially arms control monitoring programs, that are on-going. In presenting future budget requests for these activities, the Department of Defense is to include a classified justification that relates strategic relocatable target capability research programs to other efforts that would complement such a capability.

Target systems development

The Administration requested $95.644 million for the Navy's Target Systems Development Program.

The House bill would authorize $70.0 million and the Senate amendment would authorize the requested level.

The conferees agree to authorize $75.0 million for this program. The conferees agree that the reduction not be applied against the Supersonic Low-Altitude Target project.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $70.0 million at the contingent level.

Tomahawk

The Senate amendment would authorize $47.436 million and $28.342 million, respectively, for research and development associated with the Tomahawk Sea Launched Cruise Missile and the Tomahawk Theater Mission Planning Center. The House bill would authorize $20.0 million and $5.0 million, respectively.

The conferees agree to consolidate the funding for these two activities and to authorize $65.0 million, with the allocation of resources left to the discretion of the U.S. Navy.

With respect to the Theater Mission Planning Center, the conferees recognize unique requirements of the Conventional Sea Launched Cruise Missile that demand the developments in the fiscal years 1988 and 1989 request. However, the conferees also note that a substantial degree of commonality exists among the various mission planning developments underway to support cruise missile and related programs and directs the Department of Defense to reassess the potential benefits from consolidation of some of these efforts to take advantage of their common elements.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $45.0 million at the contingent level.

V-22 aircraft

The House bill would authorize the Navy's request for $465.662 million for the V-22 aircraft development program.

The Senate amendment would provide additional authorization of $10.0 million for aircraft engine enhancements.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $470.662 million with the understanding that the additional authorization of $5.0 million would be used only to enhance the operational lifetime of the T-406 engine to reduce life cycle costs.

AUTHORIZATIONS AND PROGRAM LIMITATIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Advanced Anti-Tank Weapon System-Medium (AAWS-M) and Milan II programs (sec. 202(a))

Section 202 of the House bill would authorize the amount requested $59.146 million for the Army's Advanced Anti-Tank Weapon System-Medium (AAWS-M) program subject to the Secretary of the Army certifying to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives that the Army has completed the Milan II evaluation.

The Senate amendment would authorize $59.146 million.

The conferees recommend authorization of $55.0 million.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would delete the reference to the amount authorized and limit obligations for AAWS-M to $18.0 million until the Secretary of the Army certifies that the Milan II has been evaluated.

Anti-tactical missile system (sec. 202(6)) and Aquila

Section 202(c) of the House bill would prohibit authorization for the Patriot anti-tactical missile system and the Aquila remotely piloted vehicle program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to provide $10.0 million for Aquila.

Stinger electronic security system (sec. 202(d))

Section 201(c) of the Senate amendment would authorize not less than $4.0 million for the Army to demonstrate and test alternate electronic safety devices for the Stinger air defense missiles.

The House recedes with an amendment that would reduce authorization to $3.0 million for this system.

Rifle-launched munitions (sec. 202(e))

Section 221(a) of the Senate amendment would authorize $11.827 million in fiscal year 1987 funds for a lightweight rifle-launched anti-armor munitions program to be developed primarily for Special Operations Forces.

The House bill contained no similiar provision.

The House recedes.

Non-acoustic anti-submarine warfare (sec. 204(a)(1))

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Pave Tiger (sec. 204(a)(2))

Section 206(e)(9) the House bill would authorize $50.0 million only for the Pave Tiger program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Air Force manufacturing technology (sec. 204(a)(3))

Section 206(e)(11) of the House bill would authorize $94.967 million only for the manufacturing technology program in the Air Force of which $35.0 million would be available only for the revitalization of the U.S. machine tool industry and $5.0 million only for the National Center for Manufacturing Sciences.

The Senate amendment would also authorize $94.967 million.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize the $94.967 million of which $10.0 million would be available only for the revitalization of the U.S. machine tool industry and that would delete the provision requiring that $5.0 million would be available only for the National Center for Manufacturing Sciences. The $5.0 million for the National Center for Manufacturing Sciences is to be made available from funds provided to the Defense Agencies through the Manufacturing Technology Initiative account.

F-4D air defense aircraft (sec. 204(b))

Section 206(f) of the House bill would limit to $30.0 million the amount the Secretary of the Air Force would spend to complete development of a derivative of the F-4D aircraft for the air defense mission.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Strategic technology (sec. 205(a)(1))

Section 208(a)(1) of the House bill would authorize $293.45 million to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) only for strategic technology.

The Senate amendment would authorize $233.95 million.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $288.0 million.

X-ray lithography research (sec. 205(a)(2))

Section 208(a)(8) of the House bill would authorize $20.0 million to the Defense Agencies only for X-ray lithography research.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $15.0 million.

Rankine cycle energy recovery system (sec. 205(a)(3))

Section 208(a)(10) of the House bill would authorize $5.0 million to the Defense Agencies only for the Rankine Cycle Energy Recovery (RACER) System.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Landsat program (sec. 205(b))

Section 208(b) of the House bill would authorize $25.0 million to the fiscal year 1988 and $45.0 million in fiscal year 1989 to the Defense Agencies to be used for Landsat data acquisition and for development of Landsat satellites number 6 and 7.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize funding at $15.0 million for fiscal year 1988 and $45.0 million for fiscal year 1989.

University Research Initiative (sec. 205(c))

Section 208(c) of the House bill would authorize $200.0 million, $30.0 million of which would be for the instrumentation program in fiscal year 1988 and $210.0 million in fiscal year 1989 to the Defense agencies only for the University Research Initiatives program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend authorization of $190.0 million, $25.0 million of which would be for the instrumentation program in fiscal year 1988 and $210.0 million in fiscal year 1989. The conferees do not intend for this instrumentation funding to be used solely for the purchase of instruments and equipment for existing laboratories. Where appropriate, funds should be used to develop new research capabilities. This has been an area too long neglected. The conferees believe that the nation's defense will be better served by the expansion and broadening of our present university research capability. Funding to accomplish this purpose should be given the highest priority where a clearly beneficial impact can be shown on the nation's defense.

The basis for the House provision was recognition of the need to improve the Department of Defense capability for testing microcircuits to assure the quality of these devices meet the Department's requirements. The conferees express concern that the Department's ability may be best served by improving the quality of these devices during the manufacturing process, rather than to inspect for quality after fabrication. Accordingly, prior to obligation of funds, the Department of Defense is directed to consider the potential use of techniques that inspect microcircuit devices during the manufacturing process as well as after fabrication is completed.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $5.0 million. The conferees emphasize that the funds are available to initiate a program to assess currently available navigation technology and to develop near-zero circular error probable (CEP) conventional cruise missile guidance system. The development of such a system should enhance the performance of current and future Air Force and Navy systems in a cost-effective manner. The conferees believe the Department should emphasize improved system accuracy, enroute navigation, precision terminal guidance, and reduced mission preparation time. Improvements in other cruise missile subsystems, including munitions, propulsion and airframe designs should also be examined for both near and far term improvements. The conferees would entertain a reprogramming to pursue this technology in the event the $5.0 million is not sufficient.

The Senate recedes.

Nuclear monitoring research program

Section 230A of the Senate amendment would authorize $25.0 million only for verification research for the Department of Defense, an increase of $4.637 million above the Administration's request.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $100.0 million for an advanced submarine technology program and $13.0 million to conduct studies for SSN-688 attack submarine improvements. The Senate recedes.

The $100.0 million is provided to DARPA for advanced submarine research and development work to impact submarine programs beyond the SSN-21. In order to foster a vigorous program of development in the Navy's technology base, no less than $45.0 million of this amount is to be set aside to fund additional work in the Office of Naval Technology under program elements 62323N, Submarine Technology and 62314N, ASW Technology. The distribution of these funds is to be administered by a committee composed of a member from OP-098, who shall be the senior member, a member from the Office of Naval Technology, and a member from DARPA. A representative from the Ship Dynamics Division of the Ship Performance Department, DTNSRDC, is to act as technical consultant to the committee.

Advanced Tactical Fighter program (sec. 212)

Section 209 of the House bill would limit obligation of funds for the Advanced Tactical Fighter (ATF) program pending a certification from the Secretary of Defense that the prototype aircraft will include all physical and structural modifications necessary to satisfy fully the requirement of the Navy concerning aircraft carrier catapults and arresting gear.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees want to make it absolutely clear that the Navy will be required to adopt the ATF aircraft as its follow-on air superior fighter. The conferees, therefore, insist that the Secretary of Defense assure the Congress that the ATF prototype design will be capable, in a cost effective way, of accepting all physical and structural modifications necessary to satisfy the Navy requirements.

The required Secretary of Defense certification to Congress is to include descriptive information on how the ATF prototype design will meet the Navy requirements.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would modify the certification.

Electronic warfare programs (sec. 213)

Section 210 of the House bill would authorize $443.347 million to the Secretary of Defense for electronic warfare programs and require certain requirements to be met.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $103.804 million to the Army, $235.946 million to the Navy, and $199.485 million to the Air Force for electronic warfare programs.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $482.472 million at the contingent level.

Conventional Defense Initiative (sec. 214(a))

Section 212(a) of the House bill would continue the Conventional Defense Initiative (CDI) program authorized by section 221 of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661).

The conferees agree that none of the funds specified for CDI may be used in connection with any program, project, or activity in support of the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Conventional Defense Initiative programs for the Army (sec. 214(b))

Section 212(b) of the House bill would authorize $136.1 million to the Army only for CDI programs.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 221(b)) that would authorize $600,000 for an improved mask drinking system.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $48.1 million of which $500,000 is only for the ammunition container development, $4.0 million is only for Guard and Reserve unique research and development, $8.0 million is only for the generic nuclear biological and chemical protection system for combat vehicles and tactical shelters program, $5.0 million is only for the Milan II and Bofors Bill evaluation, $600,000 is only for the chemical mask improved drinking system, $10.0 million is only for the Multi-Purpose Individual Munition evaluation, $3.0 million is only for the High Explosive Anti-Tank Rocket (HEATR) evaluation, $3.0 million is only for the Aardvark/LVS integration, $2.0 million is only for the Recovery Vehicle (ARV-90) development, and $1.0 million is only for the evaluation of the Weasel.

The conferees also agree to an authorization of $5.0 million to advance diesel engine technology. The Department should consider, but should not be limited to considering such systems as the General Motors/Federal Republic of Germany joint diesel engine, to upgrade the Rolls Royce Condor V-12 engine and other viable candidate engines.

The conferees note that the Marine Corps has expressed an interest in HEATR as a second generation rifle grenade and, therefore, direct the Department of Defense to transfer the responsibility and funds for the HEATR program to the Marine Corps. The conferees endorse House language to provide the individual soldier and Marine with a rifle-launched munition capable of defeating enemy armor as soon as possible.

The conferees support Air Force efforts to modify Air Force, Air National Guard (ANG) and Reserve aircraft, such as the A-10, with cost-effective modifications to enhance combat capability and to improve survivability. The conferees direct that $2.0 million of the $4.0 million for Guard and Reserve unique research and development is available only for the Air Force to prototype a new engine for the A-10.

The House recedes.

Conventional Defense Initiative programs for the Navy (sec. 214(c))

Section 212(c) of the House bill would authorize $78.6 million to the Navy only for Conventional Defense Initiative programs.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend an authorization of $66.1 million of which $20.0 million is only for the laser communication development program, $3.5 million is only for the electro-magnetic catapult program, $8.0 million is only for the autonomous piloted aircraft program, $14.6 million is only for the acoustic video processor program and Ada integration, $4.0 million is only for the ring-laser gyro program, and $1.0 million is only for the evaluation of the small rotary engines for use in unmanned aircraft vehicles.

The conferees agreed that the $4.0 million for the ring-laser gyro program is to be used only to conduct an evaluation and competition from among existing systems for a ring laser navigation system to replace the WSN-5. The Navy is directed not to proceed with a new development program.

The conferees further agree that the principal focus of the laser communications program should be on meeting tactical requirements. Improved strategic communications should be viewed as a highly desirable, but secondary objective of the program.

In view of overall budgetary pressures, the conferees agree that development work on an aircraft mounted system, rather than full-scale development of a satellite borne system, is the appropriate course for the program in the near term.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $15.0 million for the laser communication program at the contigent level.

The House recedes.

Conventional Defense Initiative programs for the Air Force (sec. 214(d))

Section 212(d) of the House bill would authorize $84.0 million to the Air Force only for Conventional Defense Initiative programs.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $9.6 million of which $1.0 million is only for an advanced tactical transport system program, $0.6 million is only for initiation of the development of an infrared countermeasure system based on the activated metals technology program, and $8.0 million is only for Popeye evaluation.

Balanced Technology Initiative (sec. 215)

Section 251 of the Senate amendment would authorize $300.0 million for the Balanced Technology Initiative (BTI) program for programs initiated in fiscal year 1987.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

Last year the Congress established the Balanced Technology Initiative as part of a broad-based U.S. technology initiative addressing the entire range of nuclear and conventional deficiencies in our defense posture. As noted in last year's conference report on the Defense Authorization Act (H. Rpt. 99-1001), Congress believes that the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) "should be but one part—albeit an important part" of this balanced approach.

Congress created BTI because of a concern that current and projected levels of SDI threaten to absorb an inordinate proportion of defense dollars allocated to research and development. This year's budget submission, and the requirement to reduce overall spending levels in defense, heighten these concerns.

The conferees believe the BTI program offers critical leverage to introduce advance technologies into combat systems, and directs the Department to continue to carry forward the implementation of the BTI programs selected last year and to proceed promptly to identify not less than $200.0 million within funds appropriated, for new and innovative programs, projects and activities which were not initiated last year under the BTI program.

The conferees emphasize that the Conventional Defense Initiative discussed elsewhere in this report is not a component or subset of the Balanced Technology Initiative.

The House recedes.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $275.0 million at the contingent level.

Milestone authorization (sec. 216)

Section 241 of the Senate amendment would authorize the Army tactical missile system, the Trident II missile. T-45 training system and the Medium-Launch Vehicle programs as defense enterprise programs for the purpose of section 2437 of Title 10, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would reduce the Trident II D-5 missile program by $25.0 million in fiscal year 1988 and deny milestone authorization for the Medium-Launch Vehicle program.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of $102.208 million at the contingent level for the Army tactical missile programs.

Section 235 of the House bill would authorize $73.0 million of Strategic Defense Initiative funds only for experiments and demonstration projects relating to anti-tactical ballistic missile systems.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend authorization of $50.0 million, a modification of the language provision to delete the reference to development, and specify that any system developed under this section shall be designed to be no less capable than the SA-X-12 system of the Soviet Union.

The Senate recedes.

Extended Air Defense (sec. 217(b))

Section 236 of the House bill would authorize $50.0 million only for the joint development and deployment, on a matching fund, cooperative program basis, of an anti-tactical ballistic missile (ATBM) system with U.S. allies.

Section 224 of the Senate amendment would authorize $100.0 million for research and development in connection with anti-tactical missile systems or extended air defense systems.

The conferees recommend authorization of $25.0 million to the Army for anti-tactical missile systems or extended air defense systems.

The House recedes.

The conferees recommend a total authorization of up to $25.0 million at the contingent level.

Implication of authorization of appropriations for SICBM and the rail mobile basing system (sec. 220)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 843) expressing the Sense of the Senate that the funds authorized for Research and Development for both the small ICBM and the mobile basing system for the MX missile do not constitute a commitment to procure or deploy either or both of those system.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

The Senate contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $15.0 million under the Strategic Defense Initiative program.

Prohibition against certain contracts with foreign entities (sec. 222)

Section 229 of the House bill would limit certain Strategic Defense Initiative related projects from being performed by foreign governments or foreign firms unless certain conditions were met.

The Senate amendment (sec. 814) contained an identical provision and a provision (sec. 815) that would provide for an additional condition, allowing for SDI contracts with foreign firms where a foreign government or firm agrees to fund a substantial portion of the total contract cost.

The House recedes, with a technical amendment combining the two Senate provisions into a single section.

The conferees wish to provide some clarification to this provision. The legislative history of this provision does not suggest that its proponents intended it to apply to subcontracts. The conferees, therefore, agree that this provision is not to be interpreted as placing restrictions on subcontracts that are not contained in the current law.

The conferees also wish to make it clear that the Congress intends to closely monitor the implementation of this provision to ensure that the term "substantial" does not mean a mere token contribuiton to the total contract costs.

Limitation on transfer of SDI technology to Soviet Union (sec. 223)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 227) that would prohibit the transfer of military technology developed under the Strategic Defense Initiative to the Soviet Union unless the President certifies that such a transfer is in the national interest, and Congress concurs in a Joint Resolution.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Strategic Defense Initiative human control (sec. 224)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 816) that would require that any Strategic Defense Initiative system allow for human control in initiating a system component that could damage or destroy threatening objects.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that clarifies the human control requirement.

Development and testing of ABM systems or components (sec. 225)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 233) prohibiting the obligation or expenditure of FY 1988-89 funds to develop or test anti-ballistic missile (ABM) systems or components which are sea-based, air-based, space-based, or mobile land-based unless the President proposed to conduct such development or testing and the Congress passed a joint resolution under expedited procedures approving the President's proposal.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 224) prohibiting the obligation or expenditure of any funds to develop, test, or deploy any ABM systems or components which are sea-based, air-based, space-based or mobile land-based unless the President certified to the Congress that extraordinary events related to such ABM systems or components have jeopardized the supreme national interests of the United States, necessitating a repeal of this limitation.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agreed to a provision requiring that DOD funds for FY 1988 and previous years be spent consistent with the SDI plan presented by the Defense Department to the Congress in the April 1987 SDIO Report. Specifically, the conferees agreed that funds provided to the Defense Department in FY 1988 or prior years for the development or testing of ABM systems or components may not be obligated or expended for any development or testing of ABM systems or components unless such development or testing is consistent with the testing and development described in the April 1987 SDIO report to Congress.

The conferees emphasize that a key declaration in the April 1987 SDIO Report is the statement that: "Since the President has decided as a matter of policy to observe the more restrictive interpretation of the ABM Treaty, all statements in this appendix [Appendix D of the Report] regarding compliance with the treaty provisions should be understood to be based on the more restrictive interpretation." Consistent with this statement, the Report describes no development or testing of space-based or other mobile-based ABM systems or components. The conferees agreed that "consistent with development or testing described in the April 1987 SDIO Report" means development or testing which does not involve space-based or other mobile-based ABM systems or components. By "development" and "testing", the conferees mean the definition of those terms as used by the United States Government in the ABM Treaty and as applied in Appendix D of the April 1987 SDIO Report.

The conferees further agreed that funds provided to the Defense Department for FY 1988 or prior years may not be obligated or expended for the acquisition of any material or equipment (including any long-lead materials, components, piece-parts, test equipment, or any modified space launch vehicle) required or to be used for the development or testing of ABM systems or components unless such material or equipment is required for development or testing consistent with the development and testing described in the April 1987 SDIO Report.

In adopting this provision, the conferees agreed that nothing in this limitation is intended or may be construed to preclude SDIO or contractor planning activities (including studies, design activities or computer simulations) related to any development or testing of ABM systems or components, including development and testing not described in the April 1987 SDIO report. In addition, the Defense Department may request, through normal budgeting procedures, authority to acquire material or equipment related to ABM development or testing not described in the April 1987 SDIO Report, but such requests would have to be specifically approved by the Congress. Such approval could take the form either of new legislation or Congressional approval of a transfer of funds. The conferees direct that no such transfer of any amount take place under this provision without prior notification and Congressional approval through the procedures that traditionally have governed transfers.

Prohibition on deployment of anti-ballistic missile system unless authorized by law (sec. 226)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 226) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense from deploying any anti-ballistic missile system unless it is specifically authorized by law.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Establishment Federally Funded Research and Development Center Strategic Defense Initiative (sec. 227)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 235) that would establish a Federally Funded Research and Development Center (FFRDC) to provide technical assistance to the Strategic Defense Initiative program after certain conditions are met.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize a Federally Funded Research and Development Center supporting the Strategic Defense Initiative program to be established. The conferees agree that, properly structured, a FFRDC for providing independent and objective information on elements of the SDI program would be useful and constructive. The best methods for ensuring that the new FFRDC provides vigorous and objective analysis are competitive procedures for determining the award of the contract, scientific peer review of the proposals for establishing the FFRDC, avoidance of conflict of interest, and congressional oversight.

The conferees further agreed that a contract establishing the FFRDC should not be awarded prior to October 1, 1989.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISION NOT ADOPTED—SDI FUNDING AND LIMITATIONS

Reaffirmation of U.S. right of self defense

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 231) that would reaffirm the right of the United States under the Constitution of the United States and International Law to defend and protect its citizens and its territories from ballistic missile attack through the deployment of ballistic missile defenses.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees note that Article I of the ABM Treaty states "Each Party undertakes not to deploy ABM systems for a defense of the territory of its country . . ." The United States is obligated under International Law and the Constitution to abide by the terms of the ABM Treaty as long as it is in force. Thus, until such time as the United States withdraws from the ABM Treaty (as provided for in Article XV of the Treaty), it would seem obligated not to deploy an ABM system for territorial defense. Therefore, the language in the House bill would seem inconsistent with this obligation.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED—REPORT REQUIREMENTS

Reports on Strategic Defense initiative programs (sec. 231)

Section 221(b)(1) of the House bill would authorize $25.0 million for a study of the defense of the United States against an accidental launch of strategic ballistic missiles.

Section 234 of the Senate amendment would provide for consolidated reporting requirements for the Strategic Defense initiative program to include reports on defense against an accidental launch, tactical ballistic missile defense, defense of national command authority, funding requirements and participation with allies.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require both a classified and an unclassified report and additional program cost information.

Report on SDI development plans and costs (sec. 232)

Section 222 of the House bill would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the total cost to develop and deploy a ballistic missile defense system.

The Senate amendment had no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require the use of the system architecture defined for the SDI milestone one decision, if available.

Report on how the absence of an ABM Treaty would affect SDI (sec. 233)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 817) that would require a report to Congress by the Secretary of Defense on how the absence of any ABM Treaty limitations would effect the Strategic Defense Initiative program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would also require the report to examine the effects of strategic defense on U.S. strategic offensive requirements and the effects on deterrence of comparable strategic defenses of different capabilities and potential vulnerabilities.

Annual report on Strategic Defense Initiative budget (sec. 234)

Section 223 of the House bill would require specific, annual funding details on the SDI program.

Section 232 of the Senate amendment would require a report on the allocation of the fiscal year 1988 appropriated funds for SDI.

The House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED—REPORT REQUIREMENTS

Sense of Congress regarding SDI

Section 228 of the House bill stated the sense of Congress that research and technology development on strategic defense should continue to be supported by the Congress, that funding for the SDI program should not be substantially increased until the Congress is convinced that plans that call for increasing funding are both feasible and consistent with the objectives of the program, that the Secretary of Defense should develop a plan that describes the annual cost of and time to complete the necessary research and technology development, and that the Secretary of Defense should submit annually a report describing progress made in research and technology development.

The conferees agree to incorporate the plan in section 231, which contains similar reporting requirements.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Purposes of the Strategic Defense Initiative program

Section 230 of House bill would define the purpose of the Strategic Defense Initiative program and require an annual report.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

B-1B BOMBER PROGRAM

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

B-1B bomber program (sec. 241, 243-45)

Section 207 of the House bill would authorize $375.672 million for research, development, test and evaluation for the B-1B bomber program and would provide a number of program restrictions and various reporting requirements.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would modify the restrictions and reporting requirements.

The conferees are concerned that, in spite of substantial additional research and development funds allocated by Congress to efforts to improve the defense avionics of the B-1B aircraft, that aircraft may never achieve its originally forecast capability to penetrate heavily-defended Soviet airspace. The Congress intends to monitor closely the effectiveness of the efforts funded for the B-1B aircraft program for fiscal year 1988. Unless substantial and unambiguous progress toward solving the current deficiencies in the B-1B aircraft is manifestly evident by the spring of 1988, the conferees are prepared to recommend termination of further development activities for the aircraft.

Study of B-1B penetration ability (sec. 242)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 113) that would authorize an assessment of the capability of the B-1B aircraft to penetrate enemy air defenses. An independent panel of experts from the private sector, under the auspices of the Secretary of Defense, would conduct the study.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

MISCELLANEOUS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Cooperative medical research with the Veterans' Administration (sec. 251)

Section 241 of the House bill would authorize $25.0 million only for cooperative medical research to be administered jointly by the Secretary of Defense and the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would authorize $20.0 million.

Lincoln Laboratory modernization program (sec. 252)

Section 242 of the House bill would provide authority for the Secretary of the Air Force to enter into a contract with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to carry out a program for the modernization of the Lincoln Laboratory complex at Hanscom Air Force Base, Massachusetts.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 223).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require payments for this program be charged against amounts authorized to be appropriated to the agencies for which the Lincoln Laboratory provides support.

High-speed patrol boat (sec. 253)

Section 244 of the House bill would encourage the Secretary of the Navy to evaluate a new high-speed assault and missile boat.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Pegasus engine (sec. 254)

Section 222 of the Senate amendment would repeal section 203(b) of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) concerning the Pegasus engine safety and reliability improvements for the Marine Corps AV-8B aircraft.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Military use of NASA manned space station (sec. 255)

Section 839 of the House bill would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the activities planned by the Department of Defense to be conducted on or in conjunction with the permanently manned space station to be developed by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Advanced launch system (sec. 256)

Section 226 of the Senate amendment would limit conditions under which appropriations for the Advanced Launch System (ALS) could be obligated or expended.

The conferees recognize the absence of any near-term missions that would require an interim in Advanced Launch System, and accordingly specify that the request for proposals issued by the Secretary of Defense be exclusively directed toward the objective launch vehicle with the accompanying performance enhancements and cost reductions. However, the conferees also recognize that a mission of national significance may later be identified that could require a heavy lift capability before such performance and cost objectives are achieved. Thus, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives would entertain future requests by the Secretary to restructure the ALS program to provide for such a capability if justified by national needs.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would delete the section on propulsion systems and allow for expenditure of not more than $50.0 million until certain conditions are met.

Space launch recovery (sec. 257)

Section 227 of the Senate amendment would allow for up to a total of $50.0 million to be transferred from the Army and the Navy to the Air Force for activities related to space launch recovery.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would require notification to Congress on the proposed transfer.

Study of nuclear warhead for ATACMS (sec. 258)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 848) that would authorize the Army to study the military utility and cost of a nuclear warhead option for the Army tactical missile system (ATACMS) notwithstanding that development of such a warhead is prohibited.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Anti-armor weapons testing

Section 246 of the House bill would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a comparative operational test of shoulder-fired squad level anti-tank weapons.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

SEMICONDUCTOR COOPERATIVE RESEARCH PROGRAM

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Semiconductor cooperative research (sec. 271-276)

Section 208(d) of the House bill would authorize $15.0 million to the Defense Agencies only for the semiconductor manufacturing technology program in addition to other amounts authorized for such purpose. This would result in a total authorization of $25.0 million for the semiconductor manufacturing technology.

Section 230 of the Senate amendment would provide for the participation of the Department of Defense in a cooperative program of research and development on semiconductor manufacturing technology with the consortium established by the semiconductor industry (SEMATECH). Under the Senate amendment, the Defense Department would participate via a Memorandum of Understanding with the SEMATECH consortium containing certain terms and conditions. Industry would be required to match federal funding; semiconductor manufacturing technology from SEMATECH would be available to the Department of Defense for defense purposes; and an Advisory Council shall evaluate and report to the Department of Defense and the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives annually on federal participation in SEMATECH. The provision would also authorize $100.0 million in fiscal year 1988 and $100.0 million in fiscal year 1989 to carry out this program.

The House recedes with a technical clarification to ensure that for any fiscal year the matching funds provided by industry shall be greater than the total of all government funding (state, local, and federal). The approved amendment would authorize $100.0 million for DOD participation in SEMATECH in fiscal year 1988 only.

The conferees agree that there are major benefits for U.S. defense preparedness to be derived from SEMATECH; the principal emphasis in SEMATECH shall be on improving manufacturing technology to ensure U.S. leadership in the world market, and not on design and development of a single component; and the scientific resources of the U.S. government, and in particular the Department of Energy's National Laboratories, should be encouraged to participate in SEMATECH to the maximum extent.

The conferees note with approval that the agreed amendment assures the government an important voice in SEMATECH, but at the same time establishes a businesslike arrangement that will allow SEMATECH a reasonable degree of freedom in its operation and management.

The conferees intend that nothing in the agreed amendment will restrict the DOD Inspector General and the Comptroller General of the United States from fulfilling their responsibilities with respect to the funds herein authorized. Finally, the conferees intend that small business have a full opportunity to participate in the program.

TITLE III—OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE AND WORKING CAPITAL FUNDS

OVERVIEW

The House bill would authorize $83,048,294,000 for Department of Defense Operation and Maintenance and $881,214,000 for Working Capital Fund accounts, a reduction from the President's request of $3,515,100,000 and $320,000,000, respectively.

The Senate amendment would authorize $84,385,551,000 for Department of Defense Operation and Maintenance and $1,081,153,300 for Working Capital Fund accounts, a reduction from the President's request of $1,679,143,000 and $120,060,700, respectively.

The conferees agreed to authorization $83,811,937,000 for Department of Defense Operation and Maintenance and $981,214,000 for Working Capital Fund accounts, as reflected in the following tables. This level of authorization represents a reduction from the President's request of $2,751,457,000 and $220,000,000, respectively.

The conferees recommend authorization of $83,041,955,000 for Department of Defense Operation and Maintenance and $881,214,000 for Working Capital Fund accounts at the contingent level.

Fiscal year 1989 authorization

The Senate amendment would authorize $86,898,099,000 for Department of Defense Operation and Maintenance in fiscal year 1989, a reduction from the President's request of $3,146,998,000. The Senate amendment also would authorize $1,131,948,000 for Working Capital Fund accounts, the entire amount requested in fiscal year 1989.

The House bill did not authorize appropriations for Department of Defense Operation and Maintenance and for Working Capital Fund accounts in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees agreed to an authorization of $83,798,937,000 for Department of Defense Operation and Maintenance and $981,214,000 for Working Capital Fund accounts, as reflected in the following tables. This level of authorization represents a reduction from the President's request of $6,246,160,000 and $150,734,000, respectively.

Civilian pay raise

The House bill would authorize $498.7 million to cover the cost of a three percent pay raise for Department of Defense civilian personnel, effective April 1, 1987.

The Senate amendment assumed a civilian pay raise of three percent, effective January 1, 1987 that was estimated to cost $616.0 million in budget authority, but was not reflected in the amount authorized for operation and maintenance.

The conferees agree to assume a civilian pay raise of three percent, effective January 1, 1987 that is estimated to cost $748.0 million in budget authority. In view of severe fiscal constraints, however, the conferees agreed to authorize $374.0 million to fund half of the civilian pay raise and direct the Department of Defense to absorb the remaining half in the various operation and maintenance accounts as reflected in the following table:

Service/Agency: [In millions of dollars]	Amount of Absorption

AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

General authorization of appropriations for fuel costs, inflation adjustments, and pay raises (sec. 301(b))

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 301(b)) that would authorize additional appropriations as may be necessary for nonbudgeted increases associated with inflation and the price of fuel.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 301(b)) and included general authorization for increases in salary, pay, retirement and other employee benefits authorized by law for Department of Defense civilian employees.

The Senate recedes.

Limitation on the use of operation and maintenance funds to purchase investment items (sec. 303)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 303) that would prohibit the use of operation and maintenance funds to purchase items of equipment costing more than $5,000.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to a provision raising the unit cost for expense items of equipment to $15,000 in fiscal years 1988 and 1989, but restoring the $5,000 limit in fiscal year 1990. In order to maintain budget oversight of the additional cost associated with his change, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to reflect these costs as a separate display in operation and maintenance justification materials supporting future budget requests. The conferees also agreed to direct the General Accounting Office to conduct a study of procurement of expense of equipment in fiscal year 1988 to be completed by January 1, 1989 to assist Congress in establishing future unit cost dollar limits for such equipment.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISION NOT ADOPTED

PRIMUS and NAVCARE Clinics

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 324) that fenced $60,181,000 of the funds authorized to be appropriated for operation and maintenance for fiscal year 1988 to be used only for the operation and maintenance of Primary Medical Care for the Uniformed Services (PRIMUS) clinics and Naval Primary Care (NAVCARE) clinics.

The House bill contained no similar provision but included the full amount requested in the fiscal year 1988 budget request for these clinics in the authorization for the Army, Navy, and Air Force operation and maintenance accounts.

The Senate recedes on this legislative provision because the conference agreement authorizes the full amount requested in the fiscal year 1988 budget request for these clinics in the Army, Navy, and Air Force operation and maintenance accounts.

PROGRAM CHANGES, REQUIREMENTS, AND LIMITATIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Availability of U.S. products at defense package stores overseas (sec. 311)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 304) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that package beverage stores located on overseas military installations give appropriate treatment to items produced in the United States. U.S. items would be given equitable distribution, selection and price when compared with items produced by the host nation. The Secretary would be required to submit an annual report to Congress on implementation of this section.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 322) except no annual report would be required.

The House recedes.

Nonappropriated fund beer and wine purchases (sec. 312)

The fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) provided that alcoholic beverages purchased for resale on a military installation in the United States be purchased from the most competitive source, price and other factors considered, except that malt beverages and wine purchased for resale on a military installation in the continental United States be purchased and accepted from a source of supply within the State in which the installation is located.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 305) that would extend the requirement concerning the local procurement of malt beverages and wine to the States of Alaska and Hawaii.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Pricing at commissary stores (sec. 313)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 306) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prescribe regulations establishing uniform pricing policies for merchandise authorized for sale in commissary stores. The regulations developed should require the establishment of a sale price for each item that would recoup the actual invoice cost and promote the lowest practical price for merchandise sold with the intent of optimizing the compensation value of the commissary benefit.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Limitation on Army depot maintenance funding and civilian personnel (sec. 314)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 307) that would provide that no less than $1,031,000,000 of the funds appropriated for Army depot maintenance be used to perform workload in-house and would establish a floor of 20,500 for civilian personnel under the Army Materiel Command who are performing Army depot maintenance.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to a provision that would require that not less than 60 percent of the funds appropriated for Army depot maintenance be used to perform workload in-house. At the same time, however, the conferees recognize that the current fiscal uncertainty and unforeseen operational requirements may have a serious impact on the execution of the Army depot maintenance program in fiscal year 1988 and could make the attainment of the mandated 60 percent in-house funding level inadvisable. In such an event, the conferees agreed to a requirement that the Secretary of the Army report back to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives as soon as he determines that the 60 percent in-house funding level for depot maintenance cannot be met and provide a full description and justification for the deviation, along with a plan for the attainment of the 60 percent funding level in fiscal year 1989. The conferees wish to emphasize that the Army is expected to make every effort to stabilize and reverse the downward trend in organic capability and depot level employment.

The Senate recedes with amendments.

Prohibition on managing of civilian personnel by end strengths (sec. 315)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 308) that would prohibit the Department of Defense from using end strength or any related methodology to manage civilian personnel, and would eliminate the requirement for the authorization of civilian personnel appropriations by end strength.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 441) that would waive the requirement for the authorization of civilian personnel appropriations by end strength for fiscal years 1988 and 1989.

The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 442) that would limit funds for payment of civilian salaries and wages to $35.1 billion in fiscal year 1988 and to $35.4 billion in fiscal year 1989.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to extend for one more year the lifting of congressional end strength ceiling, not to impose a limitation of funding obligations for civilian personnel and to continue the prohibition of Department of Defense management of civilian personnel or related methodology through fiscal year 1988.

The conferees also agreed to modify the existing quarterly reporting requirements on the number and dollar obligations associated with Department of Defense civilians to reflect the number of civilians and dollar obligations for the entire quarter and not for each month within the quarter.

The Senate recedes with amendments.

Report on operating and support costs of major weapons systems (sec. 316)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 309) that would require the Secretary of Defense to provide a report to the Committees of Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives on the operating and support costs of major weapon systems by February 1, 1988.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Report on efforts to measure readiness (sec. 317)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 311) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives by February 1, 1988, on the status of Department of Defense efforts to identify and measure readiness and to relate such indicators and measurements to the budget process.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Authority to provide free shuttle service for members and families in remote areas (sec. 318)

Section 2632 of title 10, United States Code, requires that a reasonable fee must be charged if a service Secretary provides transportation to and from work for persons attached to or employed by a military department.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 314) that would allow a service Secretary to waive the transportation fee in remote areas and would authorize the transportation of dependents.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to a provision that would clarify section 2632 of title 10 and section 314 of the House bill.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Operation of the United States Army School of the Americas (sec. 319)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 321) that would authorize the fixed costs of operating the Army's School of the Americas at Fort Benning, Georgia, to be paid from the Operation and Maintenance, Army account.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

By authorizing the Secretary of the Army to use O&M funds to pay the fixed costs to operate the School of the Americas, the conferees in no way intend that these funds be used for tuition or training of foreign military students at the School of the Americas.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations have sole jurisdiction over the authorization for the International Military Education and Training (IMET) program, and sales of defense articles and services under the Arms Export Control Act, the principal sources of funding for the training of foreign military students. The conferees expect that foreign military students attending the School of the Americas will continue to have their tuition costs paid from these sources and not from Department of Defense O&M funds.

The House recedes.

Authority of the Secretary of Defense to repair and maintain memorials and historic sites on the island of Corregidor (sec. 320)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 325) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to repair and maintain memorials and historic sites on the island of Corregidor. This provision also would authorize the Secretary to use Navy operation and maintenance funds, not to exceed $50,000, to support such repair and maintenance efforts.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to increase the limit on the Secretary's authorization to use Navy operation and maintenance funds from $50,000 to $100,000.

The House recedes with amendment.

Stars and Stripes Censorship (sec. 321)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 839) that would require the Comptroller General to conduct a study of allegations of censorship in the Department of Defense newspaper, Stars and Stripes. The report of the Comptroller General would be transmitted to the Congress not later than 90 days after the enactment of this Act and would include findings regarding the validity of the allegations and any recommendations considered appropriate.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees agreed that during the study the Comptroller General should consult with Sigma Delta Chi, the national journalistic society.

USS Andrew Jackson (sec. 322)

The Navy planned to begin overhaul of the USS Andrew Jackson (SSBN 619) in March 1988.

In view of severe budget constraints, the conferees agreed to prohibit the expenditure of funds to overhaul, maintain, operate, or deploy the USS Andrew Jackson, with a resultant savings of $110 million.

The conferees recognize that the service life of this 25 year old Poseidon-class submarine could, through an overhaul, be extended for only a few years. Given the limited nature of the submarine's future military utility, the conferees agreed that effective March 1, 1988, no funds could be used to overhaul, operate, maintain or deploy the USS Andrew Jackson. The conferees expect the Navy to dispose of the submarine in a manner consistent with the disposition of previous Poseidon-class submarines that were withdrawn from service.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Funding limitation and study on dual source maintenance for F-15 aircraft

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 310) that would prohibit the establishment of a second source for maintenance of F-15 aircraft at McClellan Air Force Base.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Repeal of requirement to pay certain expenses incidental to volunteer services from nonappropriated funds

Section 1588 of title 10, United States Code, permits reimbursement with nonappropriated funds for incidental expenses of voluntary services as an ombudsman or for a family service center program.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 313) that would repeal subsection (c) of section 1588 which limits the source of reimbursement to nonappropriated funds.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Authority for contractors to settle claims relating to movement of household goods directly with owners of goods

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 317) that would provide contractors the option to settle claims arising from household goods shipments, weighing over 2,000 pounds, directly with the service member.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

New threat upgrade (NTU) program

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 326) that would deny funds to the Navy for use in the New Threat Upgrade (NTU) overhaul program for work performed under a cost-plus type contract unless the Secretary of the Navy certifies that this contract procedure results in a lower cost at either a public or private shipyard, or that some overriding national security consideration exists.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

HUMANITARIAN AND OTHER ASSISTANCE

LEGISLATIVE PROVISION ADOPTED

Extension of authorization for certain humanitarian assistance (sec. 331-332)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 312) that would authorize $10 million for transporting relief supplies to Afghan refugees and would extend, for two years, the authority for space-available transportation of humanitarian supplies to certain countries in Central America.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 331) that would authorize $13 million for Afghan supplies, and another provision (sec. 332) that would provide permanent authorization for space-available transportation for humanitarian supplies to any country in the world.

The House recedes with amendment.

TITLE IV—PERSONNEL AUTHORIZATIONS

PART A—ACTIVE FORCES

ACTIVE FORCES END STRENGTH

Active duty military strengths for the Army, Marine Corps, and Air Force for fiscal year 1988 in the Senate amendment (sec. 401) and the House bill (sec. 401) were identical. The Navy end strength recommendations differed by a total of 1,000.

The House recedes.

The following table summarizes the conference agreement:

	Administration request	House	Senate	Conference
Army	780,900	780,900	780,900	780,900
Navy	593,200	592,200	593,200	593,200
Marine Corps	199,600	199,600	199,600	199,600
Air Force	598,700	598,700	598,700	598,700
Total	2,172,400	2,171,400	2,172,400	2,172,400

The Senate amendment would authorize the Administration request for active duty end strengths for fiscal year 1989. The House bill contained no similar provision. The House recedes with an amendment authorizing fiscal year 1989 end strengths at fiscal year 1988 levels. The conferees emphasize that this action is taken without prejudice and that fiscal year 1989 end strength levels will be reviewed once again next year. The following table summarizes the conference agreement.

	Administration request	Senate	Conference
Army	780,900	780,900	780,900
Navy	602,800	602,800	593,200
Marine Corps	200,100	200,100	199,600
Air Force	600,600	600,600	598,700
Total	2,184,400	2,184,400	2,172,400

Strength of active-duty officer corps (sec. 402)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 402) that would delay by one year the two and three percent officer strength reductions mandated for fiscal years 1988 and 1989 and require the General Accounting Office to submit a report examining the growth in the officer corps since 1980 and to make recommendations for reducing the number of officers with the minimum effect on readiness.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment striking the House provision and authorizing the Secretary of Defense to waive up to one-half of the required two percent reduction in fiscal year 1988. In order to exercise this waiver, the Secretary of Defense must certify to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives that a two percent reduction, without temporary legislative relief from tenure and active duty service commitment statutes, would cause severe personnel management problems in the military services. Such certification must be accompanied by recommended legislative language to effect such temporary relief for future reductions.

The amendment also provides that if the Secretary of Defense exercises this waiver authority, the waived portion of the reduction may be combined with the remaining three percent reduction for fiscal year 1989 and split equally between the two years following fiscal year 1988.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a comprehensive officer requirements study to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than March 1, 1988. The conferees also direct the General Accounting Office to evaluate the DOD report and to submit its findings to the Committees no later than April 1, 1988. The Secretary of Defense is further directed to (1) provide GAO with complete information on the methods, assumptions, and reporting formats prior to data collection and summarization and (2) provide all information to the GAO for review as the DOD study is being conducted and drafted.

The conferees emphasize that they remain concerned about the disproportionate growth in the officer corps of each of the military services and the inability of the Department of Defense to provide analytically compelling justification for the growth.

In taking action to reduce the size of the officer corps last year, the Congress required the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services by February 1, 1987 on the manner in which the reductions had been or were to be apportioned among the military services for fiscal years 1987 and 1988. The Secretary of Defense failed to comply completely with this requirement. He provided a report that only apportioned the one percent reduction for fiscal year 1987.

In his report, the Secretary of Defense indicated that he intended to delay addressing the fiscal year 1988 allocation until he had an opportunity to review a comprehensive study on officer requirements that was due to him by the end of June 1987. The study was completed in April 1987 and was shared with the Committees on Armed Services. The Secretary of Defense chose to continue to defer compliance with the statutory requirement to make a reduction allocation for fiscal year 1988.

At the request of the Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, the General Accounting Office examined the April 1987 Department of Defense officer requirements study that was to justify officer growth. The General Accounting Office concluded in a report entitled "Military Officers: DOD's Implementation of Congressionally Mandated Reductions" issued in October 1987 that "Although the study presents data on increases in the number of officers between fiscal years 1980 and 1986 by combat- and non-combat-related categories, it does not sufficiently explain the reasons for this growth."

The conferees note that the fact that the Department of Defense did not adequately explain the growth does not, in and of itself, mean that the growth was not justified. The conferees expect that a comprehensive officer requirements study will shed light on whether the growth in the active duty officer corps since 1980 can be justified on the basis of force structure, organizational and doctrinal changes, correcting for wartime shortfalls, emerging technologies and other DOD criteria cited in the October 1987 GAO report.

It is obvious to the conferees that although the Department of Defense has been aware of the concerns of the Committees on Armed Services on this issue since as early as July 1986, it has failed to make its case to date.

The conference agreement is structured to give the Department of Defense another chance to justify the growth and, at the same time, provide flexibility to the military services in implementing the reductions. The conferees will continue to review this matter with the Department of Defense during fiscal year 1988, and will sustain, modify, or repeal the remaining reduction depending on how well the department makes its case.

In executing the fiscal year 1988 cut, the conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to exempt medical personnel. Because current shortages of doctors and nurses represent "war stopping" shortfalls, the conferees believe that medical specialties must be sheltered. In addition, the conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the reductions are not concentrated solely on new accessions and junior officers. In developing a plan to accomplish the cuts, the Secretary should recommend temporary changes to defense personnel management statutes that will permit the removal of senior officers in the grades of 0-4, 0-5, and 0-6 and should execute the reduction in a way that will provide the minimum level of disruption to the long-term force profile.

Savings resulting from annualization of reductions

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 403) that would achieve savings resulting from the annualization of the reductions during fiscal year 1987 in the active duty officer corps.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision. The Senate recedes.

PART B—RESERVE FORCES

RESERVE FORCES STRENGTH

Selected Reserve strength (sec. 411)

End strengths for reserve forces for fiscal year 1988 in the Senate amendment (sec. 421) and the House bill (sec. 411) differed by a total of 7,275. The following table illustrates the differences and the conference results:

	Administration request	House	Senate	Conference
Army National Guard	458,800	457,270	454,200	457,270
Army Reserve	330,400	327,645	322,100	324,300

The Senate recedes.

Study of wartime mobilization requirements of the Coast Guard (sec. 507)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 508) that would require the Secretary of Transportation to submit to Congress a plan describing how the Coast Guard would meet 95 percent of its wartime mobilization requirements by 1998.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Wearing of religious apparel by members of the armed forces while in uniform (sec. 508)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 509) that would permit members of the armed forces to wear religious apparel if it is "neat and conservative" and does not interfere with the performance of the members' duties.

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision.

The conferees are concerned about reports that the implementing regulations may be written so narrowly as to exclude virtually all religious apparel. The law does not list eligible items of apparel, but the conferees note that the Army in the past has permitted the wearing of Sikh turbans and that the Senate and House floor debates cited various examples of the wearing of Jewish yarmulkes by members of the armed forces. The statute leaves the service Secretaries with discretion as to specific items of religious apparel, but the conferees emphasize that a regulation that would exclude virtually all religious apparel would be contrary to precedent and the purposes of this statute.

The conferees note that in drafting this section, the Congress has been extremely sensitive to the needs of the armed forces for uniformity, safety, good order, and discipline, and has carefully balanced those needs in light of the right of service members to freedom of religion, as well as the need to avoid governmental establishment of religion.

The conferees note that concern has been expressed that the "neat and conservative" standard may require commanders to make difficult determinations but agree that this issue can be largely alleviated by addressing in regulations those items of religious apparel that are likely to be at issue. Although the statute vests discretion in the service Secretaries to determine what is "neat and conservative," the conferees expect the Department of Defense to issue directives to ensure that the term "neat and conservative" is applied in a fair and reasonable manner that effectuates the purposes of the statute.

The provision also permits the Secretary concerned to prohibit the wearing of an item of religious apparel when "it would interfere with the performance of the members' military duties." The conferees note that the "nonuniform" aspect of religious apparel should not be used as the sole basis for involving the interference with duties provision, except in unique circumstances, such as to those involving ceremonial units, and, even then, only when actually performing ceremonial functions.

With respect to determinations concerning interference with military duties, the conferees expect that the procedures for making and reviewing such determinations will be specified by a Department of Defense Directive and service implementing regulations. Such regulations shall provide guidance as to the type of safety and other concerns that may be used in making such a determination. The conferees note that the determination as to whether the wearing of a particular item would interfere with military duties must be made, at the outset, by the member's immediate chain of command and that the individual is obligated to obey an order to refrain from wearing that item until review of the matter has been completed. To ensure that the issue in individual cases is resolved promptly, the conferees direct that implementing regulations provide that final review take place within 30 days for cases arising within the United States, and within 60 days for all other cases, with strict limitations on exceptions for exigent circumstances.

The new statute will apply only to the apparel "the wearing of which is part of the observance of the religious faith practiced by the member." The conferees recognize that this may require some difficult judgments but that authoritative guidance as to many items of apparel can be provided by regulation. The conferees expect that the regulations will provide a means for prompt and authoritative resolution of any novel issues to ensure that this protection is provided only to bona fide claims that the wearing of an item is part of the observance of the religious faith practiced by the member.

Military education program for Army National Guard civilian technicians (sec. 509)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 510) that would prohibit the denial of promotion of Army National Guard civilian technicians who are unable to complete training requirements because of a lack of training spaces. The provisions also would require the General Accounting Office to submit a report on the Military Education Program describing its cost effectiveness, its impact on readiness, and its effect on civilian technicians' benefits.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would clarify that otherwise fully qualified civilian technicians for whom there are no training spaces may not be denied promotion solely because they did not complete required training.

ROTC financial assistance program (sec. 510)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 432) that would abolish individual service ceilings for Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC) scholarships, establish a Department of Defense ceiling of 29,500, and require the Secretary of Defense to allocate the number of ROTC scholarships among the services.

The House bill contained a similar provision (sec. 511).

The House recedes.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with technical and clarifying amendments.

Retired grade of certain reserve enlisted members (sec. 512)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 646) that would permit enlisted members of the Army and Air Force reserve components who were serving on full-time active duty at the time of retirement to be advanced on the retired list to the highest grade held satisfactorily when their active service combined with their service on the retired list totals thirty years.

Testing program for drug, chemical, and alcohol use and dependency prior to entry into the armed forces (sec. 513)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 834) that would require testing for drug, chemical, and alcohol use and dependency as a part of the pre-induction physical for accessions into the active and reserve components of the armed forces, including those in the delayed entry program (DEP).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

The conferees expect that the Secretary of Defense will promulgate regulations to ensure practical, reliable and available methods of testing are utilized in the implementation of this section.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISION NOT ADOPTED

Elimination of one of the statutory positions of Assistant Judge Advocate General in the Navy

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 810) that would repeal the position of Assistant Judge Advocate General of the Navy, one of two statutory positions authorized in section 5149(b), Title 10, U.S.C.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The Senate took its action because the nominal incumbent to the position was assigned to primary duties outside of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy has since taken action to return the nominal incumbent to primary duty in the Navy in a position consistent with the intent of section 5149(b), Title 10, U.S.C. In reporting his action to the Congress, the Secretary of the Navy indicated his concurrence that the existing statute requires the assignment of the Assistant Judge Advocate General of the Navy to duties within the Department of the Navy. The conferees stress the necessity for the Navy to comply with the intent of this section of statute or to again face repeal of this position.

TITLE VI—COMPENSATION AND OTHER PERSONNEL BENEFITS

PART A—PAY AND ALLOWANCES

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Military pay raise for fiscal year 1988 (sec. 601)

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 601) that would provide a four percent increase in basic pay, basic allowance for quarters, and basic allowance for subsistence effective January 1, 1988, for members of the uniformed services.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 601) that would provide a three percent increase in basic pay, basic allowance for quarters, and basic allowance for subsistence effective the same date.

The House recedes with an amendment providing: (1) a three percent increase in basic pay; (2) a three percent increase in basic allowance for subsistence; and (3) a six percent increase in basic allowance for quarters. All of these increases are effective January 1, 1988.

The conferees note that, in 1985, basic allowance for quarters (BAQ) rates are restructured so that they would cover 65 percent of national median housing costs in each pay grade. Since the 1985 restructuring, BAQ has lagged behind housing cost growth, causing BAQ to fall below the 65 percent standard. The conferees intend the six percent increase in BAQ to be a step toward restoring BAQ to the 65 percent standard.

The contingent authorization provides a three percent increase in basic pay, basic allowance for subsistence, and basic allowance for quarters effective January 1, 1988.

GAO report on fairness of military housing allowances (sec. 602)

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 602) that would allow service members in the grade of E-4 and above who are married to other members to receive basic allowance for quarters when they are both assigned to sea duty.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 603) that would allow service members in the grade of E-7 and above who are considered "with dependents" soley by reason of paying child support, who are assigned adequate government quarters, and who maintain private quarters on shore while assigned to sea duty to receive a variable housing allowance.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would strike the provisions and replace them with a single provision that would direct the General Accounting Office to review and report on the military housing allowance system as it pertains to dual service couples and divorced service members and to make recommendations for appropriate changes to ensure that dual service couples and divorced service members are compensated fairly vis-a-vis service members married to civilians and single service members, respectively. This report is to include a review of all previous Department of Defense and military service studies on this subject, as well as previous legislative action in this area.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 604) that would revise the household goods weight allowances for senior enlisted personnel.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees emphasize that adjustments in household goods weight allowances can be justified for most pay grades, not just senior enlisted personnel. In addition, the conferees note that a recent report by the Department of Defense expressed support for creating with and without dependent allowances. The conferees intend to take a comprehensive look at the household goods weight allowance levels next year with the hope of providing relief to all grade levels and creating a system for those with and without dependents. As part of this review, the conferees direct the Department of Defense to submit a comparison of civil service and military moving benefits to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than February 1, 1988.

Such regulations should provide for written notification of the indebtedness, an opportunity for inspection of records and for review of the decision related to the debt.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment striking the provision and requiring the Secretary of Defense to issue regulations establishing a policy that the decision of spouses of military personnel to work or to volunteer should not be influenced by the preferences and requirements of the armed forces and that neither such a decision nor the marital status of the military member should impact the promotion and assignment opportunities of the member.

Reimbursement for adoption expenses (sec. 638)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 644) that would authorize reimbursement for certain adoption expenses. Specifically the provision would authorize reimbursement of up to $2,000 for the adoption of one child and up to $5,000 for the adoption of more than one child during a calendar year. Additionally, the provision would exclude reimbursement for expenses in adopting a child who was born as a result of artificial insemination, embryo transplantation, in vitro fertilization or surrogate parenthood.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment striking the restrictions contained in the Senate amendment concerning artificial insemination, embryo transplantation, in vitro fertilization and surrogate parenthood and authorizing the Secretary of Defense to conduct a two-year pilot program of adoption reimbursement at the same dollar levels described above in order to test the impact of the benefit on morale, recruitment and retention.

The conferees intend that the Secretary have full discretionary authority in implementing the test within the parameters the Secretary deems appropriate and issue regulations to ensure that adoption reimbursement is not used for fraudulent purposes, such as solely for acquiring citizenship or obtaining reimbursement greater than the actual costs involved with the adoption.

The conferees direct the General Accounting Office to conduct a study of adoption reimbursement in the private sector, including the types and levels of expenses usually covered and the prevalence of such programs. In addition, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report and evaluation of the two-year test program. Both reports should be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than 90 days after the test has been concluded.

The Department of Defense report should include a description of: the population covered by the test; the types of expenses reimbursed under the test; the effects on the Department of Defense of reimbursement for adoption expenses (i.e. impact on morale, recruitment, retention, and cost); obstacles to adopting a child that members of the armed forces may face and possible solutions to these obstacles; and recommendation on whether authorizing adoption reimbursement on a permanent basis is appropriate from the standpoint of equity, cost and meeting the recruiting and retention needs of the armed forces.

Finally, the conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to establish procedures to ensure that, to the maximum extent practicable within operational and other military requirements, a permanent change of station move for a military member who is in the process of adopting a child under 18 years of age occurs at a time which allows for completion of the adoption proceedings.

The conferees emphasize that, at present, insufficient data are available to determine whether adoption reimbursement is an appropriate permanent benefit for members of the armed forces. The pilot program should not, therefore, be viewed as an entitlement program. Rather, it is a concept that needs to be tested, evaluated and compared to private sector practice before a final determination on its feasibility and appropriateness is made. The conferees intend to revisit this issue carefully when the reports required under this section become available and will address the question of whether to authorize a permanent entitlement only at that time.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 642) that would allow the Secretary concerned to expand the definition of dependent to accommodate a wider range of situations.

Revision of reserve forces health professions financial assistance program (sec. 711)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 711) that would expand and restructure the stipend program for health professionals completing advanced training in critical wartime specialities authorized by section 672 of the fiscal year 1986 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-145). The House provision would (1) create a second option providing one-half the current stipend for physicians and graduate nurses in speciality training in exchange for a commitment to serve in the Individual Ready Reserve; (2) provide a $100 per month stipend to students enrolled in the third and fourth years of a baccalaureate nursing program in exchange for a commitment to serve in the Ready Reserve; (3) establish minimum annual training requirements for both the Selected Reserve and Individual Ready Reserve (IRR) for this program and require an initial 30 days of active duty for training for those fulfilling their service commitment in the IRR; and (4) repeal section 672 of Public Law 99-145.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 701).

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program (sec. 712)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 712) that: (1) would permit the Secretary of Defense to require that a recipient of an Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship agree to accept a residency in a critically needed wartime skill; and (2) would earmark 2,500 of these scholarships for individuals in the last two years of medical school who agree to accept a residency in a designated wartime skill.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment delaying the effective date until October 1, 1988. The conferees stress that directing a portion of the Department's valuable medical education resources toward reducing medical readiness shortages is the kind of strong action required to reduce the "warstopping" shortfalls in wartime medical personnel. The conferees invite the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs and the Surgeons General of the military services to submit with the next budget submission as proposal, if appropriate, to enhance the provisions's ability to further this goal.

Education loan repayment program for health professionals who serve in the selected reserve (sec. 713)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 702) extending the authority for the loan repayment program for certain health professionals who serve in the Selected Reserve until October 1, 1989.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 713) extending this loan repayment authority until October 1, 1990. The House provision would also correct a technical deficiency in the law by permitting nursing loans provided under Section B of title VII of the Public Health Service Act to be repaid under this authority.

The Senate recedes.

Constructive service credit for officers appointed with health professions experience (sec. 714)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 714) that would authorize the Service Secretary to grant service credit in a health profession other than medicine or dentistry if the professional experience of the individual would be directly used by the armed force concerned.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees emphasize that expansion of the constructive service credit is authority is designed primarily to reduce the war-stopping" 39,000 shortfall of skilled nurses in the military and that further expansion of the authority is not contemplated.

Standby capability for selective service registration of health care personnel (sec. 715)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 703) that would authorize the Selective Service System to develop and implement a system for the rapid post-mobilization registration of health care professionals.

The House bill contained a similar provision (sec. 715).

The Senate recedes.

Limited ceiling removal on special pay for medical officers (sec. 716)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 716) that: (1) would remove the $8,000 ceiling on individual payments of special pay for medical officers; and (2) eliminate the requirement that the amount paid for incentive special pay not exceed six percent of the total amount paid for special pay for medical officers.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment providing that payments of special pay in excess of $8,000 may be paid only to physicians qualified and serving in a health profession designated by the Secretary concerned as a critically needed wartime skill.

Authority to retain in active status until age 67 reserve officers in medical specialties (sec. 717)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 704(a)-(c)) that would extend the retirement age for medical personnel in the Reserve components to 67 years.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Age for initial appointment of reserve officers in critical medical specialties (sec. 718)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 704(d)) that would extend the initial appointment age for reserve medical personnel serving in health professions designated as critically needed in wartime to 48 years.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Age for mandatory retirement of medical officers (sec. 719)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 717) that would extend the mandatory retirement age of active duty medical officers from age 62 to age 67.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment permitting the Service Secretary to waive the current mandatory retirement age to age 67 in the case of medical, dental, or nursing personnel actively engaged in delivering patient care.

PART B—PEACETIME HEALTH CARE

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Catastrophic loss protection under CHAMPUS (sec. 721)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 721) that would place an annual limit on deductibles and copayments under the CHAMPUS program of $1,000 per active duty family.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 721) that would effect the same catastrophic loss protection for active duty families as well as a $3,000 annual limit on deductibles and copayments per retiree family.

The Senate recedes with an amendment establishing a $10,000 CHAMPUS catastrophic cap for retiree families, due to budget contraints. The conferees hope to address this level of catastrophic loss protection again in the future.

Allocation to health professions of specified portion of any officer accessions and growth in end strengths (sec. 723)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 723) that would require that 15 percent of the Navy's end strength growth and 25 percent of its officer accessions in fiscal years 1988 and 1989 be in medical personnel.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment delaying the requirements described above until fiscal year 1989.

Revised deadlines for the use of diagnosis related groups (sec. 724)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 723) that would extend the implementation date for use of diagnosis related groups (DRGs) as the primary budgetary tool for allocation of resources to military treatment facilities for inpatient care from October 1, 1987, to a date as soon thereafter as feasible.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment changing the implementation date to no later than October 1, 1988.

Federal preemption regarding contracts for medical and dental care (sec. 725)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 724) that would clarify that Federal rules relating to the CHAMPUS program supersede and preempt state or local laws and regulations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

CHAMPUS coverage of sudden infant death syndrome treatment (sec. 726)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 727) that would authorize for all CHAMPUS beneficiaries coverage of electronic cardio-respiratory home monitoring equipment, commonly called apnea monitors, for certain high risk infants, including subsequent siblings of victims of sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Eligibility of certain institutions that provide treatment for heart and lung conditions to receive reimbursement under CHAMPUS

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 735) that would provide that a hospital that obtains six percent or more of its operating funds from charitable contributions and limits the care it provides to the treatment of heart and lung conditions may not be denied CHAMPUS reimbursement because that hospital does not impose a legal obligation on patients to pay for services.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Authority to provide dental prostheses to dependents

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 725) that would authorize a program to provide dental prostheses for dependents of members while receiving dental care in military treatment facilities.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

PART C—HEALTH CARE MANAGEMENT

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Demonstration on management of health care in catchment areas and other demonstration projects (sec. 731)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 732) that would direct the Secretary of the Air Force to conduct demonstration projects in two military treatment facility catchment areas for a minimum of two years and would require that these projects be evaluated as an alternative to the current Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) and to the Department of Defense's CHAMPUS Reform Initiative.

The House amendment also contained a provision (sec. 733(e)) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to conduct additional demonstration projects and to evaluate them as alternative methods to providing health care under CHAMPUS and the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 726(b)) that would prohibit the Secretary of Defense and the Service Secretaries from conducting any demonstration project in addition to the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative unless the project (1) applies to each military department, and (2) is designed to ensure that the results will be representative of the results of a nationwide demonstration project.

The Senate recedes with an amendment requiring that the Secretary of Defense conduct catchment areas demonstration projects with each service conducting at least one such project and that the projects selected be appropriate for subsequent nationwide implementation.

In addition, the Secretary of Defense would conduct the additional demonstration projects described in section 733(f) of the House bill and would be required to provide reports on each of the demonstration projects comparing and evaluating the costs and benefits of incorporating the health care management techniques demonstrated into the military health care system.

Additional requirements for CHAMPUS reform initiative (sec. 732)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 733) that would prescribe additional requirements for the Department of Defense's proposed CHAMPUS Reform Initiative. Specifically, the provision would:

(1) Direct that the health care enrollment system prescribed in section 701(d)(1)(a) (i) and (ii) of the National Defense Authorization Act, 1987 (including military treatment facility enrollment) be included in the Request for Proposals (RFP) issued for the second or any subsequent phase of the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative;

(2) Direct that no contract award for the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative demonstration project be made until 60 days have elapsed after the Secretary of Defense submits to the Congress a report delineating the methodology to be utilized in evaluating the results of the demonstration project;

(3) Direct that no Request for Proposals may be issued for the second or any subsequent phase of the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative demonstration project until (a) all principal features of the project have been in operation for a minimum of one year and (2) 60 days have elapsed after a report evaluating the results of the first phase is presented to the Congress;

(4) Fence the dollars available for the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative contingent upon compliance with the three preceding directions;

(5) Require that no contractor be awarded more than one contract in subregions I, II, and III under the RFP;

(6) Require several demonstration projects to be evaluated in conjunction with the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative; and

(7) Direct that any second or subsequent Request for Proposals require that the contractor offer the option to elect a 90-day conversion insurance policy for individuals losing their coverage in the military health care system.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 726) that would (1) require that contracts for the first phase of the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative be awarded by October 1, 1987, or as soon thereafter as the Secretary of Defense determines feasible, (2) permit consolidation of the two subsequent implementation phases of the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative after a 60 day Congressional notification and waiting period, and (3) require prior notification of any enrollment program included in the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative.

The House recedes with amendments requiring an evaluation methodology, defining the requirements for proceeding to the second or any subsequent phase, requiring that no contractor be awarded more than one contract, and directing development of an insurance plan for individuals losing their coverage in the military health care system.

With respect to an evaluation methodology, the managers believe that the "Plan for Evaluation of the CHAMPUS Reform Initiative," dated July 1987, satisfies the requirement and, if the Department of Defense determines that such methodology will be used, no further report would be required. However, should the methodology be revised, a subsequent report would be required.

Medical information systems acquisition amendments (sec. 733)

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 734) that would (1) preclude the Secretary of Defense from reducing the current number of vendors in the Composite Health Care System (CHCS) procurement without subjecting each proposed system, with its full complement of hardware and Level I and II software, to a nine-month operational test, (2) fence the dollars available for CHCS contingent upon compliance with this direction, and (3) extend the test of the Veterans Administration's Decentralized Hospital Computer System (DHCP) for one year.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 731) that would repeal the requirements relating to the CHCS acquisition enacted last year by section 704 of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661).

The House recedes with amendments permitting the Department of Defense to proceed to Phase II of the acquisition process, operational test and evaluation (OT&E), but imposing reporting requirements by both the Department of Defense and the General Accounting Office prior to moving (1) from the current Phase I, the extended benchmark and operational tests, to Phase II, and (2) prior to moving from Phase II, OT&E, to deployment and full production.

In addition, the test of the Veterans Administration's DHCP would be extended to run concurrently with the OT&E phase utilizing the DHCP software available and delivered in a form suitable for testing at the time that the Department of Defense accepts and approves the Composite Health Care System software.

GAO report on payment of certain medical expenses (sec. 734)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 736) that would direct the Comptroller General to review and report on the practices under various insurance plans with respect to payments to hospitals for charges for medical services in cases where the hospital does not impose a legal obligation on patients to pay for such services.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Implementation of military health care account

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 731) that would direct the Secretary of Defense in each future budget submission to request appropriations for the Military Health Care Account for the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS), as prescribed in section 701 of the National Defense Authorization Act, 1987 (Public Law 99-661).

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees hope that the inclusion of CHAMPUS funds in each of the military services' operation and maintenance accounts will introduce a greater degree of accountability on the part of military treatment facility commanders in the issuance of Non-Availability Statements and, thereby, result in improved coordination between the direct care system and CHAMPUS. The conferees believe that the costs of the CHAMPUS program must also continue to be accounted for and monitored in an aggregated fashion, however, and direct that future budget submissions show CHAMPUS costs by service in the operation and maintenance overview of the budget.

TITLE VIII—PROCUREMENT POLICY

ACQUISITION PROCESS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Limitation of responsibilities assigned to the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation (sec. 801)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 842) that would preclude the Director of the Office of Operational Test and Evaluation from assuming responsibilities associated with developmental testing under the jurisdiction of the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition).

The Senate amendment contained an identical provision (sec. 803).

The House recedes. The conferees agree that responsibilities for operational testing are separate and distinct from functions associated with developmental testing. The conferees further agree that the Secretary of Defense should refrain from any realignment or new arrangement of test and evaluation activities, and oversight responsibilities or functions as outlined in the report submitted by the Deputy Secretary of Defense on September 25, 1987, until the Congress is able to fully review the proposed realignment and hold appropriate hearings. The conferees noted in the conference report on the Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 that developmental testing and initial operational testing are separate, yet complementary, elements in the acquisition process.

Live-fire testing (sec. 802)

The House bill contained a provision (section 822) that would amend section 2366 of title 10, United States Code governing live-fire testing by the Department of Defense. The provision would require that covered programs not proceed beyond low rate initial production until vulnerability testing is completed, require the Secretary of Defense to designate a civilian official in the Department of Defense responsible for vulnerability and lethality testing, and other actions.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 806) that would repeal section 2366.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require covered product improvement programs not proceed beyond low rate initial production until survivability and lethality testing is completed, provide for reports to Congress on such tests, clarify the definition of realistic survivability testing, and clarify contractor involvement during operational testing.

The conferees believe that live-fire testing is a valuable tool for determining the inherent strengths and weaknesses of adversary, U.S. and allied weapon systems. The conferees intend that the Secretary of Defense implement this section in a manner which encourages the conduct of full-up vulnerability and lethality tests under realistic combat conditions, first at the sub-scale level as subscale systems are developed, and later at the full-scale level mandated in the legislation.

The conferees intend this type of developmental testing to be performed as part of the responsibilities of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition. Before such testing begins, the office of the Under Secretary should have reviewed the adequacy of the test plans, or alternatives to full-scale testing, prepared by the services concerned. While testing is underway, the Under Secretary should have full access to all test data and reports and should ensure adequate resources are provided for the conduct of realistic tests, including threat munitions and targets, for instruments and facilities, and for adequate staff and funding for the Office of Live-Fire Testing. The conferees realize the Department of Defense, at times, conducts operational tests and developmental tests simultaneously. It is not the intent of the conferees to exclude contractor involvement in the developmental portion of these tests.

Oversight of cost or schedule variances in certain major acquisition programs (sec. 803)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 807) that would amend section 2435(b)(1) of title 10, United States Code, to require a program deviation report to be provided the Secretary of the military department concerned and the senior procurement executive of such military department only if the total cost of completion would exceed the baseline by 15 percent, in the case of production, 5 percent in the case of development, or miss a scheduled milestone by 90 days. The provision would also provide that either the Selected Acquisition Report or the submitted baseline description could be used as the baseline for milestone authorization. Finally, the Senate amendment would require the approval of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition before the Secretary of a military department could require the application of any regulation other than the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) and the Department of Defense FAR Supplement (DAR), to an "enterprise program."

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would: amend the provision in the Senate amendment relating to program deviation reports to provide that certain deviations from the baseline parameters would be allowed without triggering the provision requiring a report to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and the provision prohibiting the Secretary from obligating further amounts on the program until the program has been re-authorized; substitute for the Senate amendment relating to use of Selected Acquisition Reports a new provision that would clarify that Congress may provide milestone authorization for a program even though the Secretary of Defense did not propose the program for such funding, and requiring the Secretary of Defense to provide to Congress a baseline description for such program upon written request of either of the Committees on Armed Services; and retain the Senate provision requiring the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition to approve the application of any regulation other than those required in the FAR and DAR to an "Enterprise Program."

Truth in Negotiations Act amendments (sec. 804)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 843) that would amend section 2306a(g) of title 10, United States Code, and add a new section to the Truth in Negotiations Act (TINA). The House provision attempts to clarify the distinction between "cost or pricing data" that is "factual," which contractors are required to submit and certify, and data that is "judgmental," which contractors are not required to submit or certify. Under the amendment, plans, projections, or strategies based on judgment or speculation would not have to be disclosed until a decision had been made to act upon or implement them. The provision was needed to correct any misinterpretation of statements made on pages 509-510 of the conference report (H. Rept. 99-1001) accompanying the Fiscal Year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661). The House provision also contained technical corrections to the amendments enacted last year.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment retaining the technical corrections in the House provision and restating the definition of "cost or pricing data."

The Truth in Negotiations Act has been in effect for over 25 years. For most of that period, the "cost or pricing data" that contractors must make available to the government has not been defined in the statute but by regulation. Last year, in connection with numerous revisions to the Truth in Negotiations Act, Congress enacted a statutory definition of "cost or pricing data" that was drawn from the acquisition regulations. However, statements in the reports accompanying the House and Senate bills, and in last year's conference report, appear to have created more confusion than clarity.

The conferees wish to reaffirm that "cost or pricing data" should be broadly construed to include all facts that a prudent buyer or seller would reasonably expect to affect price negotiations significantly. This definition is drawn directly from the Federal Acquisition Regulation (section 15.801) in effect before the change last year; and the conferees believe that it is the best definition available.

The general definition of "cost or pricing data" was qualified in last year's amendments by the following provision: "Such term does not include information that is judgmental, but does include the factual information from which a judgment was derived." This distinction also was drawn from the Federal Acquisition Regulations. Explanatory statements and examples were included in the conference report in a further attempt to clarify the distinction between "factual" and "judgemental" data. Last year's report states that "[a] contractor is not required to provide and certify data relating to judgments, business strategies, plans for the future or estimates. A contractdor is required, on the other hand, to disclose any information relating to execution or implementation of any strategies or plans." These statements appear to have created more confusion than clarity, and the House amendments sought to settle the confusion. In lieu of adding the House amendment to the statute, the conferees wish to make clear that, in recognizing a distinction between "factual" and "judgmental" data, they intend only to codify, without substantive change, the definition of "cost or pricing data" as it has existed in applicable acquisition regulations for many years.

The overriding requirement of the Truth in Negotiations Act is that contractors make available to the government "cost or pricing data" that is "current, accurate and complete." The conferees acknowledge that such "cost or pricing data" must in some instances include information that would be considered judgmental. Although "cost or pricing data" do not indicate the accuracy of the contractor's judgment about estimated future costs or projections, they do include the data forming the basis for that judgment. The factual data underlying judgments have been and should remain subject to disclosure. Furthermore, "cost or pricing data" may include facts and data so intertwined with judgments that the judgments must be disclosed in order to make the facts or data meaningful. As such, the conferees believe that a contractor should disclose a decision to act on judgmental data, even though it has not been implemented. As currently provided in the regulations, when a contractor is required to disclose judgmental information, the certification should not be taken to mean that the judgment is correct, only that the contractor has accurately and completely disclosed its current estimate. To the extent the examples given on page 510 of conference report accompanying the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act differ from the foregoing, they should not be relied upon as legislative history in constructing the definition of "cost or pricing data."

Allowable costs may not include golden parachute payments (sec. 805)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 845) that would disallow any payment to an employee that would be considered a "golden parachute." "Golden parachutes" are agreements to pay senior employees a severance payment in excess of what would normally be paid if the company is subject to a change in ownership.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment making the provision effective as to contracts issued 120 days after the enactment of this act.

Requirement for substantial progress on small disadvantaged business contract awards (sec. 806)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 846) that would require the Secretary of Defense to make substantial progress in increasing awards to minority entities through issuance of regulations that would result in a more meaningful implementation of section 1207 of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661). In addition, the House bill contained a provision (sec. 803) that would amend section 1207(a) to include certain nonprofit research institutions in the definition of covered contractors.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision with respect to section 846, but did contain language (sec. 808) similar to section 803 of the House bill.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would delete the provisions in the House bill relating to awards of competitive contracts at a price not exceeding the fair market price plus 10 percent, and awards of noncompetitive contracts when a market survey and Commerce Business Daily sources sought notice which resulted in the identification of only one responsible small disadvantaged business. In addition, the Senate amendment would revise the requirement in the House provision relating to goals for awards of subcontracts to section 1207 entities to require that goals be established, without specifying the exact amount of the goal.

The conferees reaffirm the position taken in the Conference Report on the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 that: "The conferees further agree that this program needs time to operate before a determination can be made as to its success or failure, and the conferees agree that the issues of mandating any specific amount of set aside or increasing the 5 percent goal from that agreed to in this act shall not be considered by them in the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989 Defense authorization or Defense Appropriations bills or the Continuing Resolutions."

Amendments to the procurement technical assistance cooperative agreement program (sec. 807)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 844) that would authorize $7 million in fiscal year 1988 for assistance to state, local, and private non-profit organizations to establish programs to provide procurement technical assistance to companies attempting to bid on defense contracts. In addition, the House provision would make certain technical changes to the United States Code to delete certain provisions which were in effect only through the end of fiscal year 1987.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 303) that would authorize $7.5 million in each of fiscal years 1988 and 1989, as well as provide that the $500,000 of the amount appropriated be available each year only for procurement technical assistance programs targeted to the problems caused by the unique geographical circumstances facing Indian-owned enterprises located on or near Indian reservations.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the program at $7 million for each of fiscal years 1988 and 1989, would incorporate the technical amendments in the House provision, and would authorize $500,000 in fiscal year 1988 to establish a one-year demonstration project for technical assistance centers to serve Indian reservations. The conferees wish to make clear that this directed authorization is unique and should not be considered a precedent. The conferees agreed that due to the unusual geographical problems associated with doing business on an Indian reservation, and the absence of any procurement technical assistance programs serving them, that a one-year authorization was appropriate. The conferees wish to make clear, however, their belief that no other circumstances exist which would warrant targeting a portion of the monies available under this section to other segments of the population.

Rights in technical data (sec. 808)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 819) that would amend section 2320 of title 10, United States Code. The amendments would clarify the respective rights of the government and of contractors in technical data relating to items acquired by the Department of Defense. This clarification was deemed necessary in part because the regulations issued by the department are inconsistent with the provisions of law as adopted in the Defense Acquisition Improvement Act of 1986 (Title IX, Public Law 99-661.)

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with clarifying amendments.

The conferees are cognizant that the Department of Defense is working with the Office of Federal Procurement Policy and other government agencies to establish government-wide regulations on rights in technical data. The conferees support this effort and, as such, have allowed the department 120 days to issue new regulations. In the interim, however, the conferees believe the Secretary of Defense should rescind or revise any current Department of Defense regulation which is inconsistent with the legislative provisions adopted in Public Law 99-661.

Small business set-aside program (sec. 809)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 840) that would amend section 921 of the Defense Acquisition Improvement Act of 1986 (Title IX, Public Law 99-661), which made a series of amendments to the Small Business Act. The provision would: amend the requirement that small business participation be measured on the basis of a fair proportion of awards in each "industry category" rather than on the basis of the totality of Federal contract awards; delete the statutory direction to the Small Business Administration to segment certain Standard Industrial Classifications to reflect geographic and economic considerations; add a statutory definition of "fair market price;" delay the requirement added by Section 921 to establish goals for "small purchases" under $25,000; amend the requirement that a small business awarded a contract under the authority of Section 15(a) or section 8(a) of the Small Business Act agree to perform a specific percentage of the contract with its own employees, requiring instead that the small business exercise its "best efforts" to conform to such limitations; repeal the requirement that contracting officers disclose the identity of the firms expected to bid under a competition restricted to small businesses; and delay regulations implementing the reduction in size standards for the four industry categories designated in section 921.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment deleting the provisions in the Senate amendment that would: delete the requirement that small business participation be measured on the basis of a fair proportion of contract awards in each "industry category;" delete the statutory direction to the Small Business Administration to segment certain SIC classifications; delete the definition of "fair market price;" and amend the requirement to perform a specific percentage of the contract with its own employees. The conferees also agreed to direct the Small Business Administrator to publish any proposed regulations required under section 921 by November 30, 1987, to provide at least 60 days for public comment, and to issue final regulations by May 31, 1988.

The conferees agreed to limit the changes adopted in this section to allow the Committees on Small Business of the Senate and House of Representatives to undertake an examination of the efficacy of any additional changes. The conferees do, however, wish to address several concerns regarding the implementation of section 921, raised by the procuring agencies during hearings conducted by the Senate Committee on Small Business, and as such to clarify the purpose of several of the changes to the Small Business Act made by section 921 of the Defense Acquisition Improvement Act.

First, section 15(a) was amended by section 921(a) to require that a fair proportion of contracts be awarded to small businesses in "each industry category." The amendment provided that an "industry category is a discrete group of similar goods and services" and that such groups "shall be determined by the Administration in accordance with four-digit standard industrial classification codes." The conferees wish to clarify that although the amendments made by section 921(a) require size standards to be based on four-digit SIC codes, no legislative requirement mandates that an agency establish goals for small business and small disadvantaged business participation for each SIC code. Rather, for purposes of establishing their annual goals it is perfectly acceptable for agencies, in conjunction with the SBA, and subject to the dispute resolution procedure specified in section 15(g), to establish goals for groupings of related SICs. The dual objectives of this amendment are to emphasize agency effort in categories where small business participation rates have been low historically, but where untapped small business potential is determined to exist, and to lessen agency focus in those categories where small business potential has been high historically and can be expected to continue. In addition, to permit effective congressional oversight of agency performance in attaining small business participation goals from year-to-year, recognizing that industry categories may shift to reflect changes in the agency's procurement program, agencies shall also develop aggregate agency-wide goals, built upon the various industry category goals.

Furthermore, the conferees recognize that agencies report contract awards using the product and service codes of the Federal Procurement Data System (FPDS) rather than SIC codes. For purposes of meeting the Congressional mandate that a fair proportion of awards be made in each industry category, a reasonable correlation of FPDS and service code to SIC code grouping is acceptable.

The importance of relating FPDS data to SIC codes was clearly demonstrated when SBA analyzed the procurement set-aside data pertaining to the industry category of "refuse systems and related services" for the purpose of lowering the size standards in accordance with the requirements of section 921(f). SBA focused its attention on the set-aside procurement activity under one code, SIC 4953 (Refuse System), and ignored the substantial procurement activity in this industry category set-aside under SIC 4212 (Local Trucking without Storage). Had SBA reviewed the FPDS product service code S205 (Garbage Collection Services), a set-aside rate of 73 percent would have been established as opposed to the 22.4 percent figure reached by reviewing only SIC 4953. In the opinion of the conferees, corrective action appears warranted and should be reflected in the proposed SBA regulations implementing Section 921.

Second, section 921(b) amended provisions of the Small Business Act pertaining to the maximum allowable award price for contracts resulting from competitions restricted to eligible small business concerns under the authority of section 15(a) and those awarded to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals under the authority of section 8(a). The amendment requires that the contract price paid by an agency after utilizing either of these procurement methods cannot exceed a "fair market price".

Section 921(b) adopted the "fair market price" standard to eliminate the ambiguity believed to be inherent in the previous "fair and reasonable price" standard. The intent of section 921(b) was to reaffirm explicitly the contracting officer's present authority to undertake a price analysis that considers price data from contract awards resulting from unrestricted solicitations for similar requirements for supplies or services. Under the prior "fair and reasonable price" standard, the lowest price resulting from a competition limited to small business concerns was automatically deemed acceptable by some contracting officers, without any reference to prices for similar contract requirements awarded under restricted solicitations. The adoption of the "fair market price" standard was intended to eliminate this unwarranted limitation of the price analysis techniques available to contracting officers. At the same time, the "fair market price" standard is not intended to require that the contract award price for a contract awarded under the authority of section 15(a) on section 8(a) of the Small Business Act must reflect the lowest possible cost. The reaffirmation of the contracting officer's authority to consider prior contract award price data from similar unrestricted contact solicitations does not indicate, however, any intent to require or permit a contracting officer to consider offers tendered by firms ineligible to receive the contract award under a solicitation restricted to small business concerns. Such offers by ineligible firms continue to be "nonresponsive", and thus not binding on the offeror. Accordingly, assertions that a particular contracting opportunity could be performed at a lower price by the ineligible offeror does not provide the contracting officer with any additional reliable price data, and consideration of such offers in making the decision to restrict a particular contracting opportunity for exclusive competition among eligible small business concerns, or in making the contract award decision at the conclusion of such a restricted competition, would be inappropriate.

Third, section 921(c) amended the Small Business Act to require, as a general rule, that a firm awarded a contract under the authority of section 15(a) or section 8(a) agree to perform certain work under the contract with its own employees. The limitation was imposed to prevent the mere "brokering" of set-aside contracts with actual performance being undertaken by "other than small firms", and to assure that set-aside contracts will afford effective opportunities to sharpen the business management skills of the awardee through actual performance. SBA is authorized to vary the limitations on subcontracting on an industry-by-industy basis to take into account conventional industry practices. This requirement has also raised implementation questions that the conferees believe warrant further exposition of intent.

With regard to "requirements contracts," "task-order contracts," or similar instruments, the subcontracting limitation is intended to apply to the totality of the anticipated performance under the contract, rather than each task or order. The conferees specifically note that application of the subcontracting limitation on an order-by-order basis would severely disrupt the prime contractor-multiple subcontractor teams employed by many small high-technology research and technical service firms, a result that was certainly not intended.

The second issue regarding the implementation of section 921(c) relates to the consequences that follow upon a finding that the contractor has exceeded the specified subcontracting limitation. Under this section a firm's adherence to the specified limitations on subcontracting forms a part of the firm's status as a "small business" eligible for the award. Thus, if a firm were not to agree to perform the required portion of the work with its own employees, the firm could not be awarded a contract. If there is a demonstration that the limitations have been exceeded during the course of performance, the extent of the deviation should determine the appropriate response. A substantial deviation may properly be considered a material breach of the representations included in the firm's offer and subsequently included in the contract. As in other instances of a material breach of the contract, the contracting officer is responsible for determining the course of action that best protects the government's interests. A lesser deviation, especially one reasonably construed to be inadvertent in nature, should be viewed as a de minimus deviation and the contractor's performance deemed to be substantially compliant with the requirement. Conversely, a reasonable suspicion that the subcontracting limitations were violated with the intent to defraud would warrant referral of the matter to appropriate investigative authorities.

Finally, the conferees recognize that not all contracts require a contractor to collect or maintain cost data. Although section 921(c) speaks in terms of contract costs, a contracting officer may look to the contract award price and the aggregate award prices of subcontracts to determine the contractor's adherence in such situations.

Production special tooling and production special testing equipment (sec. 810)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 830) that would clarify the law with respect to payment for special tooling and special test equipment necessary for the manufacture and test of certain defense items. It would require that the government: fully reimburse a contractor for the costs of such tooling and equipment if the government does not intend to make future purchases of the same or similar item; reimburse the contractor immediately for at least 50 percent of the cost of the tooling or equipment, and agree to an amortization schedule for reimbursement of the remainder of the cost if the government plans to make future purchases of the item; and fully reimburse a contractor immediately for costs incurred for the acquisition of production special test equipment to be used solely for final production acceptance testing.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment making technical changes to clarify the Senate provision. One such change is intended to make clear that contractors will be paid for special tooling and test equipment which they acquire, or which they fabricate themselves. In addition, the amendment deleted the Senate provision relating to the right of the United States to take title to special tooling and test equipment. The conferees believe that the circumstances under which the United States will take title to equipment paid for by the United States are more appropriately addressed in regulation and that no statutory provision is required.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Preference in awarding defense contracts

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 820) that would establish a preference for domestic firms over foreign firms in the awarding of Department of Defense contracts unless the foreign firm is from a country that is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, or the country is designated as a major non-NATO ally as defined under section 1105 of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661). The House bill contained a second provision (sec. 823) that would clarify the exemption contained in section 820 by extending the exception to foreign firms only if that country has in effect with the United States a reciprocal defense procurement memorandum of understanding.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees believe that there are problems that need to be addressed in how the United States government integrates its trade, industrial base, and alliance defense policies. However, rather than constructing additional across-the-board protectionist barriers, the conferees would prefer an approach which encourages U.S. allies to remove protectionist barriers raised and which provides appropriate support for U.S. industries critical to preservation of the United States' long-term qualitative advantage in weaponry over the Soviet Union and to vital mobilization requirements. The conferees would consider selective application for limited periods of time of some degree of domestic preferences, if such preferences are part of a comprehensive solution to a particular industrial base requirement.

For example, the conferees commend the Administration for its Machine Tool Industry Action Plan promulgated in December 1986. In that instance, domestic preferences were combined with such positive measures as federal support for the industry's manufacturing technology consortium, the National Center for Manufacturing Sciences.

Similar approaches have been taken in the case of the semiconductor industry and the ball bearing and precision optics industries.

In the case of the bearing industry and in response to a request by Congress, the Department of Defense undertook a study of the ball and roller bearing industries and their relationship to national defense. This study eventually resulted in a DOD Bearing Action Plan that the conferees believe is constructive in its approach to dealing with a defense industrial base problem. The study determined that foreign bearings have severely harmed our domestic bearing industry and concluded that domestic capacity was in imminent danger of being unable to support national defense needs.

As a result of this report, a plan was implemented to limit the acquisition of industrial bearings to domestic sources for a three-year period. At the end of that period, the Department of Defense is to review the effects of the plan and the restriction may either be lifted, modified, or extended for another two years. The plan includes an exemption for finished products purchased overseas under bilateral or multilateral agreements and exempts co-production and co-development projects already in existence with NATO allies. The purpose of the three-year restriction is to give domestic manufacturers a temporary respite from foreign competition. This time will create an incentive for domestic companies to modernize by investing in plant and equipment so that after three years they can become more competitive.

To provide flexibility, the Department of Defense has decided to modify its plan by waiving its restrictions when U.S. bearings satisfying its specifications are not available or when buying U.S. bearings requires unreasonable lead time. Furthermore, the Department of Defense has decided to delay implementation of the plan by 18 months for countries with which the United States has a Memorandum of Understanding. The conferees urge the Department of Defense to adhere to the plan, with these modifications, and to reject further changes that might undermine the plan's effectiveness.

OTHER ACQUISITION MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Conflict of interest in defense procurement (sec. 821)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 816) that would amend language passed in the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) to clarify that the term "a primary representative" was intended to apply to one or more persons if they acted as one of the primary representatives.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Period of limitation on compensation of retired military officers limited to two years (sec. 822)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 817) that would amend section 281 of title 18, United States Code, to the extent section 281 was not repealed, to limit its application to the two-period beginning on the date a military officer retired.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment that would restate the provision so that it appears in the United States Code. The technical amendment also attempts to clarify the terms and scope of the provision.

The conferees recognize that the Judiciary Committees have jurisdiction over sections 281 and 283 of title 18, United States Code, and that these committees have under consideration a request from the Department of Defense to repeal these sections in their entirety. The purpose of the repeal would be to treat retired regular officers on the same basis as former civilian employees, retired reserve officers, enlisted military members and former military personnel (who have not retired) for purposes of applying conflict-of-interest laws. Although mitigating the need for an immediate review of sections 281 and 283, the action of the conferees does not obviate the need for a comprehensive review of these provisions by the Judiciary Committees.

Restriction on purchase of foreign-made administrative motor vehicles (sec. 823)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 836) that would prevent funds appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of Defense from being used to purchase administrative motor vehicles that are manufactured in a country other than the United States or Canada with certain specific exceptions.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would prohibit, with certain specific exemptions, the Department of Defense during fiscal years 1988 and 1989 from purchasing foreign-made administrative motor vehicles for use in the United States. The Department of Defense may procure foreign-made administrative motor vehicles for use outside the United States only if American or Canadian firms are afforded a fair opportunity to compete for the contract, except in those countries with which the United States has an existing memorandum of understanding on administrative motor vehicles. The conferees note that this agreement does not preclude the consideration of the extension of this restriction during the review of the defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1990.

Procurement of manual typewriters (sec. 824)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 813) that would restrict the procurement of manual typewriters containing components manufactured in a country which is a member of the Warsaw Pact unless that country has a most favored nation trading status with the United States.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Economic impact and employment information concerning new acquisition programs (sec. 825)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 841) that would express the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Defense should not, before an acquisiton program is approved to proceed into full-scale development, prepare any material, report, list or analysis with respect to economic benefits or the employment impact of that program in a particular state or congressional district.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISION NOT ADOPTED

Purchases of canvas products.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 840) that would amend the Continuing Resolution for fiscal year 1987 (Public Law 99-500) which requires the purchase of domestically manufactured and produced clothing and textile products. It would expand the categories of items required to be purchased domestically to include canvas products.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

Duplicative oversight

The Senate Armed Services Committee, in its report on S. 1174, the fiscal year 1988 Defense authorization bill, directed the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition to issue policies on coordination and oversight implementing section 133(d) of title 10, United States Code, not later than November 1, 1987. The Senate report also stated that the Under Secretary should consider establishment of a formal review and clearance mechanism administered by on-site Department of Defense contract administration personnel to avoid duplication. The conferees agree that the desirability of such a mechanism should be explored by the Under Secretary. The conferees direct that any mechanism adopted to minimize unnecessary duplication provide that contract administration personnel not deny access to contractors' records when the comptroller General or the DOD Inspector General determines that such records are required to fulfill their statutory responsibilities or when such records are required by the Defense Contract Audit Agency to comply with established government auditing standards.

SENSE OF CONGRESS AND REPORT REQUIREMENTS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Missile technology control regime (sec. 901)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 827) that included expressions by the Congress of support for the missile technology control regime concluded by the United States and six other governments, of hope that all nations will adhere to this regime, and of expectation that the United States will effectively implement this regime.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 832) that would require the Secretary of Defense to give a detailed report to the Congress on the manpower required to implement the Missile Technology Control Agreement.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Threshold Test Ban Treaty compliance report (sec. 903)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 801) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to Congress 30 days after enactment of this act on the use of the current official U.S. method of estimating the yield of Soviet underground nuclear tests to determine the extent to which the Soviet Union is complying with the 150 kiloton limit on the underground nuclear tests contained in the Threshold Test Ban Treaty.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment stipulating that the report be submitted by the President rather than the Secretary of Defense.

Statement in support of arms control (sec. 904)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 811) expressing Senate support for stabilizing, equitable and verifiable arms reduction treaties with the Soviet Union, endorsing mutuality and reciprocity in arms control negotiations, cautioning against unilateral concessions by the United States, and urging the President to avoid provisions that would be harmful to the security of the United States and its allies.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment changing the provision from the sense of the Senate to the sense of the Congress.

Report on the elimination of ballistic missiles (sec. 905)

Section 863 of the Senate amendment would require the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the military consequences of an arms control agreement eliminating the strategic ballistic missiles of the United States and the Soviet Union.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

Report on the implications of arms control positions (sec. 906)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 849) that would require the Secretary of Defense to provide to Congress a report describing the implications of the publicly announced positions of the United States at the START talks in Geneva on the strategic modernization program, with attention paid to the Trident SSBN, rail-garrison MX and small ICBM programs, and also assessing the advantages and disadvantages of following the recommendations of the April 1983 "Report of the President's Commission on Strategic Forces," to develop a smaller SSBN as a potential follow-on to the Trident submarine force.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Support for nuclear risk reduction centers (sec. 907)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 854) supporting the recent agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union establishing nuclear risk reduction centers.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Limitation on deployment of certain stragegic nuclear weapons

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 812) that set in permanent law limits of 820 on launchers of MIRVed ICBMs, 1200 on launchers of MIRVed ICBMs and SLBMs, 1320 MIRVed ICBMs, SLBMs, and ALCM equipped bombers, and the number of MIRVs on individual ballistic missiles, unless the President certifies to Congress that the Soviet Union has exceeded these limits.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 865) that set limits through the end of fiscal year 1988 of 820 on launchers of MIRVed ICBMs, 1200 on launchers of MIRVed ICBMs and SLBMS, and 1320 MIRVed ICBMs, SLBMs, and ALCM equipped bombers, unless the President certifies to Congress that either the Soviet Union has exceeded these limits or he is uncertain as to whether the Soviet Union has exceeded these limits.

The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 864) that said that the United States was not obligated to abide by the SALT II Treaty in whole or in part unless, inter alia, the Treaty was ratified by the United States and the Soviet Union.

The conferees agreed to delete the House provision and the two Senate provisions. The conferees note that decisions taken for budgetary reasons elsewhere in the bill will have the effect of stabilizing U.S. strategic forces during fiscal year 1988 at roughly the level deployed as of the date of enactment of the bill.

The conferees believe that maintaining interim restraint in strategic offensive force levels is not only prudent in light of current budget realities, but also consistent with the recent progress in the START negotiations and the continuing Soviet practice of retiring older ICBMs and SLBMs prior to the end of their normal service life. Assuming that progress continues to be made in START and that the Soviet Union continues early retirements of ICBMs and SLBMs, it would be the intent of the conferees to take such actions as may be required to maintain U.S. and Soviet interim restraint, including the option of foregoing the overhaul of additional Poseidon-class submarines nearing the end of their normal service life. If, however, the Soviet Union should increase the threat to U.S. national security interests posed by its strategic offensive arms, the conferees would reconsider the advisability of maintaining a stable level of U.S. strategic launchers and would entertain requests by the administration to respond appropriately in reprogramming actions, supplemental budget requests, or the fiscal year 1989 defense budget request.

Annual report on Soviet ABM Treaty compliance

Section 833 of the House bill would direct the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Congress a report on the compliance of the Soviet Union with the ABM Treaty of 1972.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees note that current law requires annual reports on Soviet compliance with existing arms control agreements.

Change in the annual report on Soviet treaty compliance

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 838) that would change the specification of the individual required to submit an annual report to Congress on Soviet treaty compliance as originally specified in section 1002 of the fiscal year 1986 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-145). Section 1002 of this Act specified that the President should submit the report. The House bill would require the Director of Central Intelligence to submit the report.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees note that an assessment of treaty compliance generally involves considerations beyond facts available from intelligence information. Therefore, the President, who can draw on the full range of information and advice from the Executive Branch, should, more appropriately, provide such information.

TITLE X—MATTERS RELATING TO NATO COUNTRIES AND OTHER ALLIES

NATO DETERRENCE

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

North Atlantic Treaty Organization defenses report requirements (sec. 1001)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 831) that would require the Secretary of Defense, in light of the proposed intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) treaty, to submit to the Congress not later than January 31, 1988, a report on the adequacy of North Atlantic Treaty Organization defenses. The House bill contained no similar provision.

Also, the Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 852) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Congress a report on the ability of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) to maintain its strategy of deterrence and flexible response in the event of an INF agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union. Both unclassified and classified versions of the report would be submitted not later than (1) 90 days after the enactment of the fiscal year 1988 National Defense Authorization Act or (2) the date on which the President submits to the United States Senate on INF treaty, whichever date is earlier. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to consolidate into one provision the NATO related reporting requirements. Section 1001 would require the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe, and the Joint Chiefs or Staff, to submit to Congress a report on NATO's ability to maintain its strategy of deterrence and flexible response in a post-INF treaty environment.

The report to be submitted in both classified and unclassified forms is to include the following information:

(1) the appropriate numbers, types, deployment and redeployment of remaining nuclear weapons and delivery systems. The Secretary of Defense is expected to take into consideration related foreign policy issues in the development of the analysis;

(2) the impact of the elimination of INF missiles on NATO's flexible response and deterrence strategy;

(3) the prospects for and impacts of NATO/Warsaw Pact conventional force structure changes and improvements on the current non-nuclear forces balance. Discussion of modernization initiatives and alternative conventional arms reduction proposals currently under consideration by the United States government should be included;

(4) the feasibility and cost effectiveness of conventional munitions enhancements as replacements for nuclear weapons currently deployed by NATO, including discussion of related allied burden sharing issues;

(5) the operational requirements associated with the follow-on-forces attack (FOFA) concept; and

(6) the status of NATO air defenses improvements in Europe.

The report is to be submitted not later than 90 days after the enactment of the fiscal year 1988 National Defense Authorization Act or the date on which the President submits to the Senate for ratification an INF treaty whichever occurs earlier.

United States military personnel in NATO countries (sec. 1002)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 813) that would prohibit during fiscal year 1988 any reduction in the number of U.S. military personnel stationed in NATO countries below the number of personnel stationed in such countries at the end of fiscal year 1987.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 842) that would express the sense of the Senate that the current level of U.S. military personnel stationed in Europe should be maintained, provided that all existing base agreements remain in effect.

The House recedes with an amendment making the provision an expression of the sense of the Congress and effecting technical changes.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization study (sec. 1003)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 333) that would designate $50,000 of the funds authorized for Operations and Maintenance in fiscal year 1988 for use by the North Atlantic Assembly to conduct a study of the future of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees recommend authorization of $50,000 for the study.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

NATO training center

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 802) that would express the sense of the Congress that NATO should vigorously pursue the development of a new training center similar to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, California.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees emphasize that the Senate's recession on this provision does not signal a disapproval of the development of a NATO training center. To the contrary, the conferees strongly believe that the training and coordination of NATO military forces would be greatly enhanced if they could train in a demanding and realistic environment similar to the National Training Center. Accordingly, the conferees urge NATO member nations to vigorously pursue the development of such a training center.

BURDENSHARING

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Study of defense expenditures in Japan (sec. 1011)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 834) that would require the Secretary of Defense to report various data relating to Japanese defense expenditures and to U.S. defense expenditures in support of the Far East.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment modifying some of the data required by the report.

Sense of the Congress regarding Japan's contributions to global stability (sec. 1012)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 826) that would express the sense of the Congress that Japan should increase its Official Development Assistance program funding, without regard to its expenditures on defense, so that by 1992, Japan would be spending approximately three percent of its gross national product on such program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment expressing the sense of the Congress that (1) by 1992, Japan's level of spending on Official Development Assistance and defense programs as a percentage of gross national product should approximate the average level of spending as a percentage of gross national product by the NATO allies on Official Development Assistance and defense programs; (2) the Philippines should be included as an area in which additional Japanese Official Development Assistance should be devoted; and (3) Japan should complete its five year defense program and fulfill its pledge to defend Japan's territory, airspace, and sealances to a distance of 1,000 miles.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Sense of the Congress regarding mutual defense alliances

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 850) that would express the sense of the Congress that the President should enter into negotiations with members of mutual defense alliances with the United States for the purpose of achieving a more equitable distribution of the financial burden of support of such alliances.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees note that a provision identical to section 850 of the Senate amendment is a matter in conference on the fiscal year 1988 State Department authorization bill.

PROCUREMENT MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Overseas Workload Program (sec. 1021)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 811) that would make all "major non-NATO allies" eligible to perform Department of Defense maintenance contracts under the European Workload Program either in Europe or in the country of the bidder.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with amendments. The first amendment provides that the provision applies to fiscal years 1988 and 1989. The second permits the work to be performed in the United States and Canada as well as in Europe or on the territory of a major non-NATO ally. The third permits the armed services to limit—on a contract-by-contract basis—the location at which the work at another location could adversely affect military preparedness (that is, readiness and sustainability) or would violate an international agreement. For example, should there be a readiness concern, a service could provide in the contract bidding rules that the work be performed within a certain radius of an American base in Europe. The fourth amendment outlines a report to be submitted by December 1, 1988, which is intended to serve as the factual basis for any further legislative action that may be necessary in fiscal year 1989 to determine the long-term policy for the handling of maintenance work under the Overseas Workload Program. The conferees note that while the statute places no ceiling on the volume of contracts that can be restricted geographically, they do not expect the exemption to be applied indiscriminately, and they note that every exemption must be individually justified in the report called for by the statute.

NATO cooperative project agreements (sec. 1022)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 820) that would make technical amendments to section 27(b)(1) of the Arms Export Control Act (section 2767(b)(1)(C) of title 22, United States Code) to authorize the United States to buy munitions from NATO or a NATO subsidiary.

The fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) included a provision (sec. 1102) that authorized the Secretary of Defense to waive certain procurement requirements and procedures so that the United States could participate in cooperative projects with its NATO allies. Section 820 of the Senate amendment would expand that authority to allow the United States to participate in the common procurement of munitions from the NATO Maintenance and Supply Agency.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to include the technical correction. The House recedes.

Report to Congress on sale or production of the M1A1 Abrams tank (sec. 1023)

The Senate amendment included a provision (sec. 853) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to Congress on any plans involving the sale, co-production or co-assembly of the M1 or M1A1 Abrams tank to, with or in any foreign country.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to require such a report within 90 days of enactment. The report is to include (1) the status of present negotiations; (2) the long-term impact on the United States; mobilization base of any coproduction plan; and (3) the impact on national security.

The House recedes with an amendment.

TITLE XI—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE MANAGEMENT

CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF NAVAL VESSELS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Clarification of limitation on contracting for short-term naval vessel repair work (sec. 1101)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 804) that would clarify the limitation on contracting for short-term naval vessel repair work contained in subsection (d) of section 7299a of title 10, United States Code.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Rates for progress payments on certain naval ship repair contracts (sec. 1102)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 805) that would require the Secretary of the Navy to provide that the customary rate for progress payments on naval ship repair contracts be 90 percent in the case of firms considered to be small businesses and 85 percent in the case of all other firms.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Domestic construction of certain vessels (sec. 1103)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 806) that would extend the requirements for domestic vessel construction contained in section 7309(a) of title 10, United States Code, for vessels constructed for any of the military services to vessels constructed for any of the armed services. In so doing, section 806 would extend these requirements to the Coast Guard, in addition to the Department of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Repeal of prohibition of use of interport differential for certain ship maintenance contracts (sec. 1104)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 818) that would repeal the prohibition on use of interport differential charges in the evaluation of ship maintenance contracts on the West Coast, as contained in section 9085 of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Appropriations Act (Public Law 99-500).

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 323) that would provide that no funds could be obligated or expended for naval vessel overhaul, repair, or maintenance unless the Secretary of the Navy complies with the provisions of section 7299a of title 10, United States Code, which includes the requirement for consideration of interport differential charges in evaluation of ship maintenance contracts.

The Appropriations Act provision that would be repealed by section 818 of the House bill expired at the end of fiscal year 1987. The managers on the part of the House note, however, that section 323 of the Senate amendment is consistent with the vote of the House of Representatives in defeating an amendment to strike the language of section 818 during consideration of the House bill.

Accordingly, the House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Alteration, overhaul, and repair of naval vessels and aircraft in public and private facilities

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 315) that would repeal a provision contained in title II of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Appropriations Act, (Public Law 99-500) that requires that funds be made available to acquire the alteration, overhaul, and repair of naval vessels and aircraft by competition between public and private shipyards and air rework facilities. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees note that, despite assertions to the contrary, the competition referred to in the Appropriations Act provision is not a true competition in the sense of two private firms competing against one another. Indeed, the situation is actually a case of the Navy, as an executive agency, making an allocation decision about performing ship and aircraft repair work "in house" or in the private sector. This, in turn, is similar to the "make or buy" decisions frequently made in private industry.

Because of the inherent nature of the make-or-buy decision, the disparate accounting systems of the public and private facilities, and the difficulties involved with having the government attempt to contract with itself, the existing legislative requirement for comparability between private bids and public estimates is impossible to satisfy.

The conferees note, however, that the internal Navy process involved in the make-or-buy decisions has resulted in beneficial effects both in public facility efficiency and private sector bids. The Navy is directed to continue its efforts along these lines.

Nevertheless, because section 315 of the House bill would repeal an Appropriations Act provision that expired at the end of fiscal year 1987, which occurred prior to this report, the House reluctantly recedes.

CONTRACTING OUT

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Contracting out (secs. 1111-1112)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 316) that would prohibit the contracting out of maintenance functions at twenty Army depots and arsenals.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 814) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to delegate authority for the implementation of the commercial activities program to installation commanders.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provisions.

The conferees agreed to accept the House provision but limited its applicability to two years.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 815) that would permanently prohibit the contracting out of security guard functions presently being performed by Department of Defense civilians.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

SECURITY AND COUNTERINTELLIGENCE MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Limited counterintelligence polygraph program (sec. 1121)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 821) that would make the existing experimental counterintelligence polygraph program a permanent program and limit the number of examinations permitted—with some exempted categories—to 20,000 per year in fiscal years 1988, 1989, and 1990 and to 10,000 in each succeeding fiscal year for which Congress does not otherwise specify a different number.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with amendments. The conferees approved language that would (a) give the program a permanent authorization, (b) permit 10,000 examinations annually—with additional exemptions—during fiscal years 1988, 1989, and 1990, and 5,000 in any succeeding fiscal year for which Congress does not authorize another number, and (c) establish an annual reporting requirement.

Assessment of Soviet electronic espionage from Mount Alto Embassy site (sec. 1122)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 826) that would require the Secretary of Defense to review and assess the present and potential threat to the security of sensitive U.S. government communications posed by the Soviet occupation of Mount Alto in the District of Columbia. It would also require the Secretary to make a determination whether occupation of this site is consistent with the national security of the United States.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Dissemination of unclassified information concerning physical protection of special nuclear material (sec. 1123)

The Administration request included a legislative provision that would provide enhanced security for special nuclear material by controlling the disclosure of information relating to the measures utilized by the Department of Defense for the protection and security of such material. The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 805) that would grant authority to the Secretary of Defense, similar to authority provided to the Secretatry of Energy under current law (42 U.S.C. 2168), to prohibit unauthorized dissemination of information concerning physical protection of special nuclear materials.

The House bill contained no similar materials.

The House recedes.

The conferees direct that the Secretary of Defense look to the regulations implementing similar authority for the Department of Energy in establishing regulations to implement the section. The Department of Energy regulations (10 C.F.R. part 1017) make careful distinctions between types of information that are intended to be restricted and types of information that are intended to remain in the public domain and those distinctions should be contained in Department of Defense regulations.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Study of classified information

The House bill contained a provision (section 831) that would require the Secretary of Defense to conduct a study to establish procedures for declassification of a substantial portion of currently classified information. The procedures are to ensure adequate protection of national security. The Secretary may implement the findings and conclusions of the study within 30 days after the date the report is transmitted to Congress.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

SPECIAL ACCESS PROGRAMS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Oversight of Special Access Programs (secs. 1131-1133)

The House bill contained three provisions concerning congressional oversight of special access programs (secs. 114(a), and 807). The Senate amendment contained one provision (sec. 844).

Sense of the Congress

The House bill (sec. 114(a)) expressed the Sense of the Congress that the Advanced Technology Bomber, the Advanced Tactical Aircraft, and the Advanced Cruise Missile involved technologies critical to United States national security, that certain information involving the technology in these three programs should remain classified, and that it would be consistent with the public interest to disclose limited, nonclassified information about these programs concerning cost and schedule. The Senate amendment contained no similar provision. The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

General Accounting Office report

The House bill (sec. 114(f)) would require the General Accounting Office to study the criteria used by the Secretary of Defense in determining whether to designate a program as a special access program and report the results of this study to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives not later than February 1, 1988. The Senate recedes with an amendment that would change the date to April 1, 1988.

The conferees agreed that in directing the Comptroller General to conduct this study the direction was not meant to imply that access to programmatic special access data was required. The study is meant to focus on the process for designating special access programs as such, as well as the criteria.

Congressional oversight

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 807) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress, and in conjunction with the submission of a budget for the next fiscal year, an unclassified report on the total amount requested in that budget for special access programs of the Department of Defense, require certain classified information on programs designated as special access, and require that such information be available, as specified, and other purposes.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 844) that would require the President to include with the budget for the next fiscal year, a separate report in either classified or unclassified form to the appropriate committees of Congress providing specified information on designated special access programs, a report stating the policy for the classification of reports and materials relating to programs designated special access programs, and other purposes.

The Senate recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree that the section is not intended to require the reporting of special access programs that are reported to the Select Committees on Intelligence of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Clarification of intent

The conferees elected not to define the term "special access programs" in law. The conferees were concerned that a definition in law would reduce the flexibility of the defense committees in receiving information and might disclose sensitive information. However, the conferees expect that the Secretary of Defense will report to the defense committees all special access programs that are programs (1) of the Department of Defense or (2) which are managed by the Department on behalf of some other governmental entity. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to consult jointly with the chairman and ranking minority members of the defense committees each year to determine which special access programs are to be reported to the defense committees.

Nothing in these sections is intended to reduce the degree of information provided to the defense committees regarding special access programs from that which is currently provided to the defense committees. Although a provision is included that would provide the Secretary of Defense with the authority to waive certain provisions in the interest of national security concerns, the conferees expect this waiver to be used sparingly. The conferees further agreed that nothing in this legislation is intended to imply that the Secretary may withhold any information from the chairman and ranking minority members of the defense committees.

The conferees intend the provision to improve the Congressional oversight of special access programs by requiring that comprehensive data on all special access programs under the jurisdiction of the defense committees be provided. The conferees generally agreed that the Department of Defense has provided data on these programs to the defense committees in a forthcoming manner but that the growth in overall levels of funding in the special access category now requires a more formalized reporting requirement and oversight process.

In considering this legislation, the conferees expressed concern with the need for broad application of special access security controls. The conferees agreed that under some circumstances, the rigorous security provided by this security system is fully justified. The conferees believe, however, that the application of the "need-to-know" principle required under normal security procedures was intended to limit access to classified information in the same manner as do special access procedures. The need to broaden significantly the scope of information under special access security controls was considered by the conferees to be the result of a breakdown in the proper application of the "need-to-know" principle.

TITLE XII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

FINANCIAL MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Transfer authority (sec. 1201)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 801) that would permit the transfer of an authorization for obligation for any fiscal year to any other authorization for that fiscal year made available in titles I, II or III upon determination by the Secretary of Defense that such a transfer would be in the national interest. The provision provides the authorization for reprogrammings involving the transfer of authorization between authorization as set out in bill language.

The authority to transfer could only be used to provide authorization for higher priority items than the items from which authorization was transferred and could not be used to provide authorization for an item that was denied authorization by the Congress. The Secretary of Defense would be required to promptly notify the Congress of transfers. The total amount of transfers would be limited to $2 billion.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Limitation on availability of funds (sec. 1202)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 824) that would preclude the Secretary of Defense from obligating or expending appropriations for any program, project or activity in excess of the amount needed to carry out such program, project or activity and preclude the Secretary from obligating appropriations for a program, project or activity unless a contract had been entered into within three years after the appropriation became available.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to a provision that would preclude the Secretary of Defense from obligating or expending appropriations for any program, project or activity unless a contract had been entered into within three years after the appropriation became available.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Requirement for consistency in DOD budget presentations (sec. 1203)

As part of its planning for the section on the Department of Defense included in the President's budget at the beginning of the year and for other purposes, the department maintains a Five Year Defense Program (the FYDP) showing proposed obligational authority at the level of program element for the budget year and the four succeeding fiscal years. The Five Year Defense Program is classified secret.

In the last two years, aggregate obligational authority shown in the Five Year Defense Program has matched the aggregate numbers for the Department of Defense included in the President's budget only for the budget year (or years, in the case of the biennial budget for fiscal years 1988-89 submitted at the beginning of fiscal year 1988). For the outyears, aggregate obligational authority in the Five Year Defense Program has exceeded the aggregate numbers in the President's budget: by $77.2 billion in the case of the biennial budget submitted for fiscal years 1988-89 and by $58.8 billion in the case of the budget submitted for fiscal year 1987.

Section 818 of the Senate amendment would require the Five Year Defense Program to be submitted to Congress with the President's budget and that the "amounts of estimated expenditures and proposed appropriations" for defense programs, projects and activities in the Five Year Defense Program and in other "program and budget information" submitted to Congress be consistent with such amounts included in the President's budget.

The provision is intended to require the Department of Defense to show in detail how its plans for the outyears of the five-year period presented in the Five Year Defense Program would be affected by enactment of the aggregate obligational authority for those years set forth in the President's budget. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment. The amendment would delay the requirement that the Five Year Defense Program be submitted to Congress until April 1 of each year. The purpose of this amendment is to provide the Department of Defense with an opportunity either to conform fully the Five Year Defense Program with the President's budget submission or to explain any remaining differences.

The conferees expect that the Five Year Defense Program submitted in accordance with this provision will be at the same level of detail as the latest update of the Five Year Defense Program, Summary and Program Element Detail, Fiscal Year 1988 and 1989 Budget Submission, together with the associated Construction, Procurement and RDT&E Annexes. These documents may be submitted at whatever level of classification as is appropriate to their contents.

The conferees do not intend to impede the budgetary planning process of the Department of Defense or to interfere with the utility of the Five Year Defense Program in that process. They expect that the delay of the Five Year Defense Program submission to April 1, the provision for explanation of differences between the Five Year Defense Program and the President's budget, and the likelihood that the Five Year Defense Program will be submitted in classified form will provide sufficient protection to permit continuation of its use in the planning process.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Outlay savings from delay of certain payments

The House bill includes a provision (section 810) that would delay progress payments and other payments for goods and services by the Department of Defense. The provision prohibits Department of Defense payments to contractors (other than small business concerns) that would otherwise be made during the last 12 days of fiscal year 1988 until fiscal year 1989. The provision was intended to improve the financial management of the Department of Defense by further limiting the possibility of wasteful end-of-fiscal-year spending. Taken together with current law limitations on the obligation of funds during the last two months of the fiscal year, the provision avoids inefficient surges in spending at year-end.

The provision would reduce fiscal year 1988 outlays by $6,060 million, $2,160 million from delayed progress payments and $3,900 million from delayed other payments. The provision would not affect budget authority.

The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. Section 4 of the bill limits appropriations so that the total for outlays for the national defense function (function 050) do not exceed the levels specified in the Budget Resolution for fiscal year 1988.

OTHER ITEM OF INTEREST

Interpretation of the classified annex

A classified annex accompanies this conference report. The classified annex sets forth certain classified programs and activities for which funds are provided in this Act, the amounts provided for those programs and activities, and certain limitations with respect to those programs and activities.

Concern has been raised as to whether the classified annex could be misinterpreted to authorize programs or activities that are not authorized in the Act or to otherwise avoid the prohibitions and limitations in the Act. Such an interpretation would not be proper. The conferees emphasize that the classified annex may not be construed in a manner that is inconsistent with this Act.

FORCE STRUCTURE AND POLICY

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Implementation of special operations forces reorganization (sec. 1211)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 819) that would strengthen current law on the reorganization of special operations forces (SOF). The provision would:

(1) direct the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the commander of the special operations command (SOCOM) receives sufficient resources to discharge his responsibilities, including particularly his responsibilities involving development and acquisition of special operations, peculiar equipment and management of resources for special operations as a separate budget activity;

(2) require the Secretary of Defense to establish not to exceed 120 civilian personnel positions for the SOCOM headquarters and specify that they may be designated as engineering, scientific, and management positions;

(3) specify that the SOCOM commander have authority to exercise the functions of the head of an agency under chapter 137 of title 10;

(4) specify that the SOCOM commander may conduct internal audits and inspections of purchasing and contracting actions through the SOCOM inspector general;

(5) designate the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Special Operations and Low Intensity Conflict (ASD/SOLIC) as the principal adviser to the Secretary of Defense on SOLIC matters and the principal official on those matters within the senior management of the Department of Defense;

(6) specify that when the Secretary of Defense exercised authority, direction, control, and supervision of SOLIC matters through the Office of the Secretary, it would be done through the Assistant Secretary for SOLIC;

(7) require that activities specified in section 167(e) of title 10 as responsibilities of the SOCOM commander be programmed, and resources for such activities provided, through the major force program category for special operations forces directed by section 1311(c) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed that insufficient progress has been made by the Department of Defense in implementing the reorganization of special operations forces mandated by section 1311 of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661).

The conferees decided that congressional action was necessary to remove a number of bureaucratic obstacles to meaningful progress. The action of the conference committee reaffirms the commitment of the Congress to correct serious deficiencies in the capabilities of the United States to conduct special operations and to engage in low intensity conflicts.

As was the case last year, the conference committee was forced by bureaucratic resistance within the Department of Defense to take very detailed legislative action in mandating the urgently needed reorganization and reform of special operations and low intensity conflict capabilities, policies, and programs. The conferees recognized that their recommendations represent a degree of specificity that, under normal circumstances, should be avoided in legislation. In this instance, however, the Congress could not acquiesce to efforts in DOD to delay or block implementation of the law. The conferees agreed to give high priority to overseeing the implementation of the provisions enacted last year and this year. Moreover, the conferees expressed their willingness to continue to play an extremely active legislative role until such time as the congressionally mandated reorganization and reform are fully and effectively implemented.

The Senate recedes with five amendments that would amplify or make the House language more specific.

The first Senate amendment (reference item 1 above) would add a requirement specifying that the SOCOM commander's resources be sufficient to enable him to discharge his advice/assistance responsibilities on program and budget matters to the ASD/SOLIC.

The second Senate amendment (reference item 2 above) would replace the House language authorizing up to 120 civilian engineering, scientific, management, and other positions for the SOCOM headquarters with a requirement that the SOCOM headquarters staff may not be less than 450 personnel on September 30, 1988, and that 111 of the total shall be civilian employees unless otherwise directed by the SOCOM commander or the Secretary of Defense.

The conferees agreed that the civilian positions may include professional engineering positions primarily concerned with research and development of special operations-peculiar equipment; professional scientific positions in the physical and natural sciences, medicine, communications, electronics, and aviation; and professional management positions in program management, administration, contracting, warehousing and depot operations, testing, procurement, and financial, budgeting and automation systems.

The third Senate amendment (reference item 4 above) would require that the staff of the SOCOM commander include an inspector general who would conduct the auditing and inspection functions specified in the House bill as well as such other inspector general functions as may be assigned.

The fourth Senate amendment (reference item 6 above) would replace the House bill direction concerning the exercise of authority, direction, control, and supervision by the Secretary of Defense through the ASD/SOLIC with several requirements: that a DOD directive containing a charter for the ASD/SOLIC be published not later than 30 days after enactment of the conference report; that the charter include, inter alia, duties and responsibilities of the ASD/

SOLIC, specify his relationship to other DOD officials, delineate any delegation of authority from the Secretary of Defense to the ASD/SOLIC; that the Secretary of Defense submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives the chartering directive and a report explaining how the charter fulfills the provisions in law pertaining to the ASD/SOLIC; that the Secretary of the Army carry out the duties and responsibilities of the office of the ASD/SOLIC until that office is filled for the first time; that the Secretary of the Army submit a monthly report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives concerning his activities in fulfilling the legislative provisions pertaining to the ASD/SOLIC; and that the Secretary of the Army and the first ASD/SOLIC, with respect to the duties and responsibilities of the ASD/SOLIC, report directly to the Secretary of Defense or the Deputy Secretary of Defense.

The conferees agreed that the original House language specifying a preeminent position for the ASD/SOLIC within the Office of the Secretary of Defense with respect to special operations and low intensity conflict matters reflected the original and continuing intent of the Congress with respect to that position. The conferees recognized, however, that certain technical flaws precluded retaining the formulation in the House bill. The fourth Senate amendment contains requirements aimed at the same objective as the original House language. By designating the Secretary of the Army to act as the de facto ASD/SOLIC, the Senate amendment also reflects congressional insistence that the Department of Defense undertake to implement the special operations forces reorganization without further delay.

The fifth Senate amendment (reference item 7 above) would make the House language more specific with regard to the major force program category for special operations forces. The amendment would require: the creation, not later than 30 days after enactment of the conference report, of the major force program category for special operations forces required by section 1311(c) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661); the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a certification that all program recommendations and budget proposals for special operations forces are included in the special operations force program category; and the Secretary to submit a report explaining the composition of such major force program category.

The conferees also agreed on several changes proposed by the Senate intended to clarify the language in the House bill.

Conventional Defense Advisory Board (sec. 1212)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 809) that would establish a Conventional Defense Advisory Board within the Department of Defense. The board would survey conventional warfare requirements, identify shortfalls, particularly in Europe and report to the Secretary of Defense its findings and recommendations annually. In turn, the Secretary of Defense would forward the report of the Board to the Congress.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agreed to a provision (sec. 1212) that would require the Comptroller General of the United States to convene and chair a Conventional Defense Study Group composed of representatives from the General Accounting Office, the Library of Congress, the Office of Technology Assessment, and the Congressional Budget Office. That study group would submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives and to the Secretary of Defense. The report would provide an assessment of the balance of conventional forces in NATO Europe and make recommendations for improving that balance.

The conferees direct that the assessment by Conventional Defense Study Group should include, but not be limited to, the following elements:

1. An assessment of the conventional balance of forces in NATO Europe, with emphasis on the Central Region. The study group should survey the views of experts on the sufficiency of NATO's conventional forces for both deterrence and defense in the event of a Warsaw Pact conventional attack. To the extent possible, this study group should review the views of experts on the Soviet leadership's perspective on the conventional balance.
2. A review of deficiencies in NATO's conventional forces and an assessment of the impact of current and planned U.S. and NATO Allied defense programs on those deficiencies.
3. Recommendations for alleviating those deficiencies identified in the survey that will not be corrected by current and planned NATO defense programs.
4. An estimate of the costs of implementing those recommendations for alleviating the remaining deficiencies, and the feasibility of implementing those recommendations within planned levels of defense spending by NATO nations.

Subsection 1212(a) would require the Secretary of Defense to appoint a Conventional Defense Advisory Board for the purpose of reviewing the report of the Conventional Defense Study Group and to provide that review to the Secretary of Defense and the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives together with any recommendations regarding the implementation of the report of the study group.

Report on competitive strategies (sec. 1213)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 802) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a classified and unclassified report on the competitive strategy concept, an assessment of Soviet and Warsaw Pact weaknesses that could be candidates for exploitation through competitive strategies, and other material.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Publication of a net assessment (sec. 1214)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 832) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to provide for the publication, on an annual basis, of a document in an unclassified form that contains a net assessment of the defense programs and capabilities of the United States and of the Soviet Union.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would require both a classified and an unclassified report that contains a net assessment of the defense capabilities and programs of the armed forces of the United States and its allies as compared to those of their potential adversaries.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Aerial defense mission

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 846) expressing the sense of Senate that the Secretary of Defense should establish as a mission of the Department of Defense the defense of the United States against all aerial threats, including aircraft, ballistic missiles, cruise missiles, and other types of missiles.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

MISCELLANEOUS REPORTS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Study of requirements for centralized space operations (sec. 1221)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 835) that would direct the Secretary of Air Force to study the requirements for centralized space operations as part of the Consolidated Space Operations Center near Colorado Springs, Colorado.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Report on contingency plan to deal with disruptions in Persian Gulf oil (sec. 1222)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 728) that would require a report from the Departments of Defense and Energy on plans for dealing with any significant disruptions in the supply of crude oil produced by Persian Gulf states.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment making the Departments of Defense and Energy jointly responsible for performing the study, and other amendments. The conferees note that the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives, the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, and the Energy and Natural Resources Committee of the Senate and the Energy and Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives are all interested in the issue and request that the report be distributed to each of them.

Study of early decommissioning of two aircraft carriers (sec. 1223)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 847) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report of a study of the early decommissioning of two aircraft carriers to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives by November 15, 1987. The study would compare the current Department of Defense plan for decommissioning aircraft carriers with an accelerated, alternative plan in terms of cost savings, aircraft requirements, personnel requirements, and requirements for other types of Navy ships.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agree to the reporting requirement with two modifications. First, that the Secretary of Defense be further directed to solicit and report on an assessment by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff on the implications of accelerated aircraft carrier retirements on the ability of the United States to meet both peacetime aircraft carrier deployment commitments and the wartime requirements for aircraft carriers set forth by the Unified Commanders.

Second, insofar as this assessment notes a deficiency between peacetime carrier deployment requirements and the number of deployable carriers, the report shall also include an assessment regarding:

(a) How carrier deployment strategies could be adjusted or changed to cover commitments while maintaining an equitable distant deployment rotation for personnel and equipment considerations.

(b) What alternative combinations of ships and/or aircraft might be deployed to substitute for a carrier, either permanently or temporarily, in all situations in which carriers are currently deployed.

(c) What special considerations will accompany the eventual removal of USS Midway from her homeport in Japan.

The House recedes with an amendment.

TECHNICAL AND CLERICAL AMENDMENTS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Technical and clerical amendments (sec. 1231-33)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 860) that would make technical and clerical changes to various provisions of Title 10 and Title 37, United States Code, and to section 956(b)(1) of the Defense Acquisition Improvement Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-661).

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

GAO study of capabilities of the United States to control drug smuggling into the United States (sec. 1241)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 825) that would permit assignment of members of the armed forces to assist civilian law enforcement officials in drug searches, seizures, or arrests outside the land area of the United States under certain circumstances.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 835(a)-(c)) that would direct the General Accounting Office to conduct a detailed study of the potential effects of military assistance to civilian law enforcement officials.

The House recedes on section 825 of the House bill.

The House recedes on section 835(a)-(c) of the Senate amendment with amendment.

The GAO study is intended to be a comprehensive analysis regarding illegal drug smuggling into the United States and the current capabilities of the U.S. to deter such smuggling.

In making an assessment of the national security implications of illegal drug smuggling under subsection (a)(1), the study should consider both military and civilian threats to our national security and the relative roles that military and civilian organizations can play in addressing such national security issues.

Under subsection (a)(2), GAO will study the impact of resource limitations on civilian interdiction efforts and the capability of the Department of Defense to respond to requests for assistance from those law enforcement agencies. This aspect of the study should reflect resource, training, and operational constraints that both the civilian agencies and the Department of Defense face.

Subsection (a)(3) requires an analysis of the effect on the armed forces and civilian agencies that would result from enactment of legislation authorizing direct military participation in arrests, searches, and seizures. GAO should consider the need of civilian agencies for such assistance, the impact of such assistance on the effectiveness of the interdiction effort, the types of military assets that could be loaned to civilian agencies, the cost of training military personnel to perform law enforcement tasks, and the impact on military readiness of performing such missions for civilian agencies. With respect to military readiness, the GAO study should assess whether current military training and readiness functions are being appropriately funded, and assess the impact of military training, readiness, and operations that would result from using Department of Defense readiness and training resources to perform a civilian law enforcement mission.

Under subsection (a)(4) the GAO report will examine the effectiveness of current cooperative arrangements between the U.S. Customs Service and National Guard units from the States of Arizona, Utah, Missouri, and Wisconsin in anti-drug smuggling operations along the United States-Mexico border.

Under subsection (a)(5) the General Accounting Office will determine whether giving the Armed Forces a more direct, active role in drug interdiction activities would enhance the morale and readiness of the Armed Forces.

The matter covered by subsections (a)(6)-(10) requires a thorough review of the capabilities for detection and apprehension of airborne drug smugglers, and an assessment of how efficiently and effectively are the agenies involved in this effort are planning and coordinating their efforts to enhance and integrate these capabilities. In particular, GAO should examine whether the civilian agencies are procuring assets that will duplicate capabilities already in existence or expected to be fielded in the near future by the Department of Defense.

The managers recognize the inherent power of the Comptroller General to contract for outside assistance in any study that GAO performs. It is the intent of the conferees that GAO draw upon all necessary resources to guarantee a thorough technical assessment of these issues, including the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment.

Transfer of funds to Coast Guard (sec. 1242)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec 835(d)) that would authorize the transfer of $3 million in fiscal year 1988 and $6 million in fiscal year 1989 from the Department of Defense to Department of Transportation for the Coast Guard's law enforcement detachment (LEDET) program.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Although the primary responsibility to pay for the LEDET program remains with the Coast Guard, the managers recognize that the Navy benefits from the program and should pay a portion of the costs. The level of funding anticipates that the Coast Guard will have a total of 400 persons in the LEDET program in 1988, and 500 in 1989. The actual number of LEDET personnel serving on naval vessels will depend on deployment schedules and deployment tempo. When not accompanying the Navy, LEDET personnel should be assigned by the Coast Guard to appropriate law enforcement duties.

Annual planning for Department of Defense drug enforcement assistance (sec. 1243)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 841) that would require the president, in the annual budget submission, to provide Congress a list of all Department of defense drug interdiction assistance to be made available to civilian law enforcement agencies and a detailed plan for providing equipment and other drug interdiction assistance during that fiscal year. The Department of Defense would then convene a conference with all civilian agencies involved in narcotics interdiction and would enter into memoranda of agreement specifying the distribution of such assistance.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment including the Secretary of State as part of the conference dealing with the distribution of drug interdiction assets.

With respect to secure communications equipment, the conferees stress that there is a priority need for such secure equipment for the Operation Bahamas and Turks and Caicos Program (OpBat) and that the Department of Defense should give immediate attention to this need.

Provision of command and control data from Tyndall Air Force Base for drug interdiction assistance (sec. 1244)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 829) that would prohibit the use of Department of Defense funds to provide drug interdiction data from Tyndall Air Force Base.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment. The Senate amendment recognizes that reimbursement to the Department of Defense is required for such assistance under the Economy Act, as incorporated in chapter 18 of title 10, but provides an exception in this instance as an incentive to reduce overall costs by locating a civilian law enforcement facility adjacent to Tyndall AFB.

Assistant to the secretary of defense for atomic energy (sec. 1245)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3134) that would change the Department of Defense member of the Nuclear Weapons Council from the Director of Defense Research and Engineering to the Undersecretary of Defense for Acquisition. The section would also establish the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Atomic Energy as a presidential appointee.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 861) that would establish the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Atomic Energy as a presidential appointee, require that the individual appointed be appointed from civilian life, and would provide that the person serving as Chairman of the Military Liaison Committee on October 16, 1986 may be appointed as the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Atomic Energy without the advice and consent of the Senate.

The conferees agreed to a provision that would establish the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Atomic Energy as a presidential appointee and provide that the person serving as Chairman of the Military Liaison Committee on October 16, 1986 may be appointed as the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense for Atomic Energy without the advice and consent of the Senate.

Oil shipments for use of military facilities overseas (sec. 1246)

An amendment to the Export Administration Act of 1979 approved by the House of Representatives in the Trade Bill (H.R. 3) would prohibit any export of domestically produced crude oil or refined petroleum product, with some exceptions (section 331 of H.R. 3 amending section 7(d) of the Export Administration Act of 1979). The purpose of this section is to conserve domestic petroleum for U.S. uses in an era when U.S. sources are increasingly unable to fulfill U.S. demand.

This amendment might be read to preclude the shipment abroad of crude oil or refined petroleum products for use by the Department of Defense or U.S.-supported installations or facilities, even though such shipments would not typically be exports because no sale to a foreign entity is involved.

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 828) that would clarify that such shipments are not to be considered exports under the amendments to the Export Administration Act.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Payment of claim (sec. 1247)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 830) that would allow the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a claim to the Merchants National Bank of Mobile, Alabama, for losses resulting from the cancellation of a Government guarantee of a loan to a defense contractor.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with a technical amendment.

Forensic examination of certain physiological evidence (sec. 1248)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 845) that would require the Secretary of Defense to prescribe procedures that whenever any physiological specimen is obtained from a person for the purposes of determining whether that person has used any controlled substance:

1. the specimen is in a condition that is suitable for forensic examination, and
2. a written laboratory report is submitted to the investigative agency that submitted the specimen prior to any court-martial or other criminal proceedings.

The procedures would ensure that evidence is preserved and transported in accordance with valid medical and forensic practices and provided by the most expeditious transportation means necessary to carry out an accurate examination.

It also requires that when evidence of LSD use exists in connection with a criminal investigation, the specimen be submitted to a forensic laboratory capable of determining whether the individual has used LSD.

The provision also specifically states "Nothing in this section shall be construed as providing a basis, that is not otherwise available in law, for a defense to a charge or a motion for exclusion of evidence or other appropriate relief in any criminal proceeding."

The provision would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives not later than March 1, 1988, describing the procedures.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

Adjudicating certain cases of non-registrants for the draft (sec. 1249)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 809) that would permit the Office of Personnel Management to issue regulations providing that adjudications relating to the "knowing the willful" failure of civil service job applicants to register with the Selective Service System may be performed by executive agencies rather than by the Office of Personnel Management itself, thus easing the administrative burden.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Transportation of certain beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration on Department of Defense aeromedical evacuation aircraft (sec. 1250)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 825) that would direct the Secretary of Defense and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into an agreement under which the Department of Defense would provide aeromedical evacuation services on a space available basis for patients receiving care in Veterans' Administration medical facilities.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISION NOT ADOPTED

Surcharge authority of Defense Logistics Agency

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 837) that would authorize the Director of the Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) to impose a surcharge on DLA customers for recovering costs associated with maintenance and repair of fuel storage facilities; leasing of facilities and purchase of equipment for storage facilities; and maintenance and repair costs associated with DLA supply centers and depots.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

TITLE XIII—AMENDMENTS RELATED TO GOLDWATER-NICHOLS REORGANIZATION ACT

JOINT OFFICER PERSONNEL POLICY

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Joint officer personnel policy (sec. 1301, 1302, 1303, 1304, and 1305)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 821) that would make a number of modifications to the joint officer management policies established by the Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-433). In order to correct unanticipated problems and provide additional management flexibility, the provision would:

(1) allow the Secretary of Defense to delegate only to the Deputy Secretary of Defense his authority to select officers for the joint specialty;

(2) repeal a requirement that joint specialists selected under the critical occupational specialty provision must complete a full tour of duty in a joint assignment as soon as practicable after selection;

(3) allow waiver of the sequence requirement that the joint educational program precede a full joint duty tour in qualifying an officer for selection for the joint specialty if an officer has already fulfilled both prerequisites;

(4) allow waiver of the joint educational requirement for selection to the joint specialty if an officer has already completed two full tours of duty in a joint assignment;

(5) manage the length of joint duty assignments through average tour lengths for all officers rather than minimum tour lengths for individual officers;

(6) reduce the average tour length of joint duty assignments to 2½ years for general and flag officers and 3 years for field grade officers;

(7) reduce the minimum tour length for joint duty credit for general and flag officers to 2 years;

(8) set 3 years as the minimum tour length for joint duty credit for field grade officers, except that full credit may be provided for a joint duty assignment whose length has been established by regulation as less than 3 but more than 2 years;

(9) allow cumulative credit toward the joint tour minimums in items 7 and 8 for joint tours that are (a) prescribed by regulation as less than 2 years, or (b) terminated because of hardship, medical reasons, or other unique circumstances;

(10) permit the Department of Defense to exclude statutory exceptions to the minimum joint tour lengths, as well as certain other uncompleted joint tours, when calculating compliance with the average tour length requirements;

(11) define joint tour as one or more assignments within the same organization but without a break between assignments;

(12) limit promotion monitoring, for all but joint specialists, to the first promotion consideration following reassignment from joint duty;

(13) require that the annual report of the Secretary of Defense include data on (a) the tours excluded from the computation of average joint tour lengths, and (b) the use of each waiver authority;

(14) remove the prohibition on counting assignments within an officer's own military department as joint duty, but limit to 100 the number of such assignments; and

(15) provide a 4-year exception to the joint tour requirement for promotion to flag rank for nuclear propulsion officers.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The decision by the conferees to approve a number of modifications to the joint officer management policies prescribed by title IV of the Goldwater-Nichols DOD Reorganization Act of 1986 does not reflect any lessening of the congressional commitment to these policies. In fact, the benefits of increased emphasis on joint duty service evident during the past year have further convinced the conferees of the wisdom of the policy objectives mandated last year. The conferees agreed, however, that effective and fair implementation of the joint officer management policies could be enhanced by the timely correction of unanticipated problems and by providing additional management flexibility on a limited number of policies.

The conferees deferred action without prejudice on a number of additional changes proposed by the Department of Defense and contained in the Senate amendment. The conferees agreed that insufficient information was available at this time to make informed judgments on these proposals. The conferees made a commitment to comprehensively examine additional changes in time to act on them, if appropriate, in next year's defense authorization bill. Such examination should be assisted by the Secretary of Defense's first report on the implementation of the joint officer management policies, a report from the General Accounting Office, and additional implementation experience.

The conferees recognized that the Department of Defense has made significant progress in implementing the joint officer provisions. Moreover, the basic principles underlying these provisions are supported by the department's senior civilian and military leadership. This fact was affirmed in recent correspondence from the Deputy Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in which they stated: "We pledge our full support for continued enhancement of the Department's joint officer management policies and practices."

Given the complexity of the evolving joint officer personnel system, the conferees noted that the basic objectives of title IV of the Goldwater-Nichols Act could be obscured by vast amounts of procedural changes required to implement fundamentally different joint officer management policies. Such loss of purpose could manifest itself in "ticket-punching" approaches rather than more thoughtful efforts to genuinely enhance performance of joint duty responsibilities. In this regard, the conferees urge the department continually to reexamine its detailed implementation to ensure consistency with the fundamental objectives of title IV and to reaffirm the validity of the concepts developed in support of those objectives.

The House recedes with seven amendments to the provision contained in the Senate amendment. The approved modifications preserve the integrity of several key joint officer policy provisions enacted in 1986. The conferees agreed that their action should not be considered as changing the original purposes of the altered provisions, which include:

(A) making joint education relevant to joint duty by establishing a pattern whereby education normally precedes a joint duty assignment for officers attempting to qualify for selection to the joint specialty;

(B) lengthening joint duty tours in order to increase the experience level of officers in joint duty assignments and, thereby, the quality of their contribution;

(C) requiring that key joint duty assignments be filled only by officers who have met the educational and experience requirements and have been selected for the joint specialty;

(D) safeguarding the future promotions and assignments of joint officers; and

(E) making joint duty a prerequisite for promotion to general or flag rank.

The conferees also noted that the Secretary of Defense was provided management flexibility in the original legislation through (i) waivers, (ii) liberal transition provisions of 2 years or more, and (iii) a major exception to prescribed requirements which permits the qualification for the joint specialty of combat officers with a critical occupational specialty (COS) through shorter joint duty tour lengths and a reverse sequence for joint education.

The first House amendment (reference item 2 above), although accepting elimination of the requirement for every officer who qualified for the joint specialty through the COS exception to serve in a second joint duty assignment, would require that an appropriate portion of critical joint duty assignments be filled by COS joint specialists who qualified through the 2-year exception. The conferees agreed that an appropriate portion means roughly the same percentage of 2-year COS joint specialists serving in critical joint duty assignments as the percentage of 2-year COS joint specialists to the total number of joint specialists.

The conferees noted, however, that none of the 1,000 joint duty assignment positions thus far designated as critical by the Defense Department were general or flag officer positions. Therefore, the House amendment would also require that a substantial portion of the general and flag officer joint duty assignment positions be designated as critical under section 661(d)(2) of chapter 38, title 10, United States Code (as amended by section 1302(b) of this Act), and that revised joint duty assignment list pursuant to section 668(b)(2) (as amended by section 1302(c) of this Act) be published within six months of the enactment of this Act.

The conferees agreed that omitting general and flag officers from critical joint duty assignment positions poses a number of problems. First, the failure to so designate general and flag officer positions undermines one of the purposes of the joint officer management title—to ensure that the most important joint duty positions are filled by outstanding officers with broad experience in joint matters, i.e., by joint specialists. Second, the rationale for allowing the COS exception is diminished if combat officers who are usually at the 0-6 level) are not needed for second joint tours in critical joint duty assignments as general or flag officers.

To carry out the objectives of title IV of the Goldwater-Nichols Act, the conferees believe the significantly more than 50 percent of general and flag officer joint duty positions should be designated as critical joint duty assignments. However, at this time, the conferees were unable to determine how quickly the Department of Defense could achieve this goal or the specific percentage that should be prescribed. For these reasons, the conferees determined to specify that a "substantial portion" of such positions should be so designated. In next year's comprehensive examination of additional changes to the joint officer policies, the conferees expect the department to provide sufficient information for the Congress to be able to prescribe a more specific goal.

The House amendment would also clarify the use of the COS exception by:

(A) precluding the nomination or the selection of general and flag officers for the joint specialty through the COS exception;

(B) limiting the designation of critical occupational specialties to those military occupational specialties involving combat arms in the case of the Army, or the equivalent in the case of the other services. For example, the conferees agreed that in the Army, combat arms means specialties such as infantry, armor, or artillery, but not combat support or service support specialties;

(C) requiring military occupational specialties involving combat arms that are experiencing severe shortages of trained personnel to be designated as critical occupational specialties;

(D) limiting 2-year joint duty assignments to the initial joint duty assignment of a COS officer provided that the officer has been nominated to the joint specialty before such assignment begins; and

(E) limiting the number of 2-year COS joint duty assignments that may be excluded from the annual computation of the average length of joint duty assignments to not more than 10 percent of the number of all joint duty assignment positions identified pursuant to section 668(b)(2) (as amended by section 1302(c) of this Act).

Finally, the House amendment would increase congressional oversight of the critical occupational specialty by requiring that the Secretary's annual report include certain data on the use of the COS exception.

With respect to the critical occupational specialty exception, the conferees also agreed that the Secretary of Defense should issue guidelines which provide that

(A) to the maximum extent practicable, officers with military occupational specialties involving combat arms conform to the standard requirements set out in paragraph 661(c)(1) (as amended by section 1301(b) of this Act) in qualifying for the joint specialty;

(B) the COS designation be used as an exception to the standard requirements to allow nominated officers to transfer expeditiously from an operational assignment into a joint duty assignment for two years and then back to an operational assignment;

(C) the combat arms occupational specialties designated as COS be reassessed periodically as conditions change; and

(D) a mechanism be established to monitor the careers of officers who have been nominated for the joint specialties under the COS exception and who have completed the shortened initial assignment to ensure that sufficient number of the most outstanding officers complete the school requirement later in their careers and thus provide an appropriate balance of combat specialties in the joint specialty.

The second House amendment (reference items 3 and 4, above) would accept the waiver of the joint education sequence requirement and the waiver allowing two joint tours in lieu of joint education while limiting their application. The conferees agreed that the waivers should apply to small numbers of officers. Accordingly, the House amendment would specify that the waivers should be exercised only under unusual circumstances and that the combined total of both waivers should be limited to not more than 5 percent of the total number of officers selected during that fiscal year for the joint specialty.

The conferees cautioned that the waiver of joint education for an officer who has completed his second joint tour is not intended to qualify senior officers for the joint specialty who earlier in their careers avoided fulfilling the joint specialty requirements. The conferees agreed, therefore, that the waiver of joint education should be granted only under exceptional circumstances to general or flag officers and only if the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff determines that such a waiver is necessary to meet a critical need of the armed forces.

The House amendment would also require that officers nominated for the joint specialty must have completed the joint professional military education requirement or be designated as having a critical occupational specialty to count in meeting the goal that approximately one-half of joint duty assignment positions are filled by officers with the joint specialty or nominated for the joint specialty. The House amendment would require, however, that COS specialist-nominees may not at any time account for more than one-third of joint duty assignment positions required to be filled by joint specialists or nominees under section 661(d)(1) (as amended by section 1302(a) of this Act).

The third House amendment (reference items 5 through 9, above) would delete the Senate provision on managing by average tour lengths, shortening the length of average tours, and providing credit for shorter minimum tours, and modify the Senate language prescribing a full tour of duty in a joint duty assignment and cumulative service in joint duty assignments that total in length not less than the applicable standard prescribed in section 664(a). The House amendment would prescribe that an officer be considered to have completed a full tour of duty in a joint duty assignment if the officer has served 3 years as a general or flag officer or 3½ years as an other officer; has cumulative service in qualifying joint duty assignments that meets the 3 year or 3½ year requirements; or in the case of an officer (other than a general or flag officer) nominated for the joint specialty and designated as a critical occupational specialist, has served 2 years in a joint duty assignment.

Cumulative credit toward the full joint duty tour lengths required by law (3½ years for 0-6 and below; 3 years for general and flag officers) would be authorized for: a tour of duty outside the United States or in Alaska or Hawaii; a tour terminated for unusual personal reasons; and tours terminated when an officer is reassigned to another joint duty assignment in certain cases. All joint duty service included for cumulative credit would be required to be a minimum of 10 months in length and have been served within 8 years of the computation of cumulative credit. Finally, any tours included for cumulative credit for reasons other than those specified above would be required to be not less than 2 years, except in the case when an officer is reassigned to another joint duty assignment.

The fourth House amendment (reference item 10 above) would make conforming changes from the third House amendment to the provision of the Senate amendment that excludes certain joint duty tours from the annual computation of average joint tour lengths. The House amendment would authorize the Secretary of Defense to exclude the following joint duty service from such computations:

(A) service of an officer (other than a general or flag officer) nominated for the joint specialty and designated as having a critical occupational specialty if such service is not less than 2 years in length; however, the number excluded is limited to not more than 10 percent of the number of all joint duty assignment positions;

(B) service not completed because of retirement, release from active duty, or suspension from duty;

(C) service not completed because of a reassignment for unusual personal reasons, reassignment to another joint organization following promotion to a higher grade if the reassignment was made because no commensurate joint duty assignment was available within the same organization, or reassignment to another joint organization following elimination of a position in a reorganization;

(D) service performed outside the United States or in Alaska or Hawaii; and

(E) service to bring an officer's cumulative credit service to the prescribed standards if such service is not less than 2 years, except that no such minimum tour length is prescribed in the case in which an officer is reassigned following a promotion or reorganization.

The conferees intend that all service in joint duty assignments, except for the prescribed exclusions, be included in the computations of average tour lengths. Specifically, the authority of the Secretary of Defense under section 664(b) of title 10, United States Code (as amended by section 1303(a) of this Act), to waive the general rule on the length of a joint duty assignment in the case of any officer does not alter the requirement that the service of such officer must be included in the computation of the average length of joint duty assignments.

The fifth House amendment (reference items 12 and 14 above) would delete the Senate provisions limiting promotion monitoring and permitting up to 100 assignments within an officer's own military department to be counted as joint duty assignments.

The sixth House amendment (reference item 13 above) would add a third new reporting requirement to the two contained in the Senate provision. The House amendment would require that data on above the zone promotions be included in the Secretary's annual report.

The seventh House amendment (reference item 15 above) would accept the Senate provision that provides a 4-year exception, until January 1, 1992, to the joint duty prerequisite for promotion to flag rank in the case of qualified nuclear propulsion officers, but would modify the Senate requirement that the Department of Defense develop a plan to ensure that such officers serve in joint duty assignments. The conferees agreed that the objective of the plan should be to ensure that after January 1, 1992, the nuclear propulsion community does not have to place undue reliance on Secretary of Defense waivers. To underscore the importance attached to this objective, the House amendment would require that the plan include milestones for each calendar year beginning with January 1, 1989, that provide for a progressively greater proportion of nuclear propulsion officers complying with the joint duty requirements of chapter 38 of title 10, United States Code. The House amendment would task the Secretary of Defense, after consultation with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to develop the plan and would require that it be implemented within six months of the date of enactment of this Act. Along with a copy of the plan, the Secretary would be required to submit a report explaining how the plan fulfills the objectives prescribed by this provision. Finally, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff would be responsible for monitoring the implementation of the plan.

OTHER MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Temporary authorization of an additional Assistant Secretary of Defense (sec. 1311)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 822) that would authorize a temporary exception to section 136(a) of title 10, United States Code, by permitting an increase in the number of Assistant Secretaries of Defense from eleven to twelve until January 20, 1989. It would also permit, for a similar duration, an increase by one in the number of level IV positions authorized in section 5315 of title 4, United States Code.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Reduction in personnel assigned to management headquarters activities and certain other activities (sec. 1312)

TITLE XIV—FOREIGN RELATIONS MATTERS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Commendation of U.S. Armed Forces operating in the Persian Gulf (sec. 1401)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 851) that would commend all members of the U.S. Armed Forces who participated in or supported the successful September 21-22 operation that thwarted Iranian minelaying activities in the Persian Gulf.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that changes the provision to a "Sense of the Congress" and broadens the commendation to include the U.S. Armed Forces that participated in the successful October 8 military operation.

The conferees also agreed on several changes proposed by the House intended to clarify and elaborate the language in the Senate amendment describing the circumstances and the events to be commended.

Sense of the Senate on sinking of Iranian vessels (sec. 1402)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 829) expressing the sense of the Senate that the U.S. Navy is fully justified in sinking any Iranian vessel that threatens safe passage of American warships or vessels carrying American citizens.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes, noting that the section remains a sense of the Senate provision. The conferees also agreed that the provision is not intended to alter the current Rules of Engagement applicable in the Persian Gulf region.

Sense of the Congress on U.S. policy toward Panama (sec. 1403)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 828) expressing the sense of the Congress that the U.S. should cease all economic and military assistance to, suspend all military equipment shipments to, and prohibit the importation of all sugar products from Panama unless the government of Panama promptly (a) demonstrates progress in reestablishing civilian control of the political system, (b) restores freedom of the press and all other constitutional guarantees, (c) empowers a non-military transitional government, and (d) begins an investigation of allegations of illegal activities by members of the military.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that modifies the language prohibiting the importation of Panamanian sugar products. Rather than expressing the sense of the Congress that such imports be prohibited, the conferees agreed that the United States should reassess whether their importation should be prohibited.

Sense of Congress on Japanese trade with Vietnam (sec. 1404)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 855) that would urge Japan to prevent its firms from engaging in developmental trade with Vietnam and discontinue providing Vietnam with long-term credit and developmental equipment.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment noting that Japan has been taking some action in the direction requested and urging it to continue doing so.

Limitation on introduction of armed forces into Nicaragua for combat (sec. 1405)

Section 847 of the House bill would prohibit funds appropriated to the Department of Defense from being obligated or expended for the purpose of introducing U.S. armed forces into Nicaragua for combat unless the Congress declared war or enacted specific authorization for such introduction, or such introduction were necessary to meet a clear and present danger of hostile attack upon the United States, its territories or possessions or its allies, or to meet a clear and present danger to, and to provide necessary protection for, the U.S. Embassy, U.S. government personnel, or U.S. citizens, or to respond to hijacking, kidnapping, or other acts of terrorism involving citizens of the United States or its allies. Section 847 would not apply if MIG aircraft, or other aircraft of similar design or capability, or nuclear missiles or any other nuclear weapons were introduced into Nicaragua. Finally, nothing in section 847 would invalidate any provision of the War Powers Resolution (Public Law 93-148) or any authority of the United States to act under the provisions of the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that changes the provision to a "Sense of the Congress." Under the agreed provision the Congress reaffirms the sense of Congress expressed in the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1986, that United States Armed Forces should not be introduced into or over Nicaragua for combat. The provision also contains the statement that it shall not be construed as affecting the authority and responsibility of the President or Congress under the Constitution, statutes, or treaties of the United States in force.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Soviet Union embassy agreements

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 827) that would require the President to void the current embassy agreements between the United States and Soviet Union and require negotiations for a new agreement under which the Soviet Union will move its embassy to a site in the District of Columbia not more than 90 feet above mean sea level.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

Because an indentical provision is being considered in the conferees State Department authorization bill for fiscal year 1988 the Senate recedes.

Restrict contributions to international organizations

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 833) that would withhold obligation of fifty percent of funds made available for each fiscal year by any provision of law to meet the assessed contributions of the United States to the United Nations until the President certifies to Congress that significant progress has been made in eliminating:

1. the excessive use of secondment, and
2. the blatant control of nationals of member countries serving in the United Nations through regular supervision, consultation, and evaluation of such nationals by the permanent missions to the United Nations.

The amendment is aimed at neutralizing espionage activities by eliminating some of the control the Soviet Union and its satellites have over their United Nations employees.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

Because an identical provision is being considered in the conference on the State Department authorization bill for fiscal year 1988, the Senate recedes.

Prohibition on import of all Iranian products

The Senate amendment contained provisions (secs. 856-858) that would prohibit the importation into the United States of "any article grown, mined, produced or manufactured in whole or in part in Iran."

The House bill contained no similar provisions. However, H.R. 3391, passed by the House of Representatives, contains provisions of a similar nature.

The conferees note that on October 26, 1987, President Reagan signed an Executive Order barring all imports from Iran. As a result, these sections are not necessary, and the Senate, therefore, recedes.

United States Department of State Freedom of Expression Act of 1987

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 862) that would find that the U.S. Department of State declared itself a temporary foreign mission on September 15, 1987 for the purpose of avoiding demonstrations against the visit of the foreign minister of the Soviet Union to the Department of State office in Washington, D.C. The amendment would state that the national security interests of the United States are not well served for the Department of State to declare, and it shall not declare, itself to be a foreign diplomatic mission.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

Because an identical provision is being considered in the conference on the State Department authorization bill for fiscal year 1988, the Senate recedes.

DIVISION B—MILITARY CONSTRUCTION

OVERVIEW

The fiscal year 1988 budget request contained authorization of $9,791,857,000 for military construction and family housing. The House bill would authorize $8,058,376,000 for military construction and family housing. The Senate amendment would provide $8,969,748,000 for this purpose.

The conferees recommend authorization of $8,448,479,000 for military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $8,149,009,000 at the contingent level.

The fiscal year 1989 budget request contained authorization of $10,347,550 for military construction and family housing. The House bill did not address this request, deferring it without prejudice. The Senate amendment would provide $5,105,629,000 for this purpose.

The conferees recommend partial authorization of $5,192,661,000 for military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1989. Several projects that had been considered for authorization in fiscal year 1988 were deferred by the conferees until fiscal year 1989. The conferees expect the Department of Defense to submit an amended fiscal year 1989 military construction and family housing budget request, adjusted for actions taken by Congress on its fiscal year 1988 program, fact of life changes, and revised cost estimates based upon more accurate cost estimates.

MISCELLANEOUS REPORT REQUIREMENTS

In the respective reports on the bill, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives included items of "Special Emphasis." The conferees hereby endorse the language on items of "Special Emphasis" found in both reports and, unless some modification to that language is contained in this joint statement of the committee of conference, the positions and requirements contained under items of "Special Emphasis" in both Senate and House reports on the fiscal year 1988 military construction authorization bills are concurred in by the conferees.

DEFENSE WIDE ISSUES

ITEMS OF SPECIAL EMPHASIS

Extension of authorizations

The Department of Defense budget request included military construction projects which required an extension in authorization authority if they were to be executed during fiscal year 1988 or 1989. Some of these projects were originally authorized in fiscal year 1984. In responding to this request, the House bill would extend most of these projects through fiscal year 1988; the Senate amendment would extend them through fiscal year 1989.

The Senate recedes. The conferees are concerned about the number of projects that have not been executed within two years of authorization. Although a few have been unavoidably delayed due to factors beyond the control of the Department of Defense, most could have been executed with more aggressive management. To the extent that projects are delayed for lack of funds, the services are encouraged to adjust their future budget requests to fully fund pending and proposed construction.

Inasmuch as the Congressional Budget Office is scoring these extended projects as new outlay authority, each extension contributes to the already difficult budgetary problem. The conferees intend to carefully scrutinize the fiscal year 1989 Department of Defense request for extensions of authority. The Department of Defense is expected to provide justification for each requested project authorization extension with the amended budget.

Waiver of space limitation for general officer quarters

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2303(c)) that would waive the space limitation for general officer quarters for family housing units at the following locations:

(1) Scott Air Force Base, Illinois—3 units

(2) Shaw Air Force Base, South Carolina—1 unit

(3) MacDill Air Force Base, Florida—1 unit

The House bill included an authorization to construct 100 family housing units at St. Louis Support Center, Illinois.

The House recedes with amendment. The conferees agree to the space waivers contained in the Senate amendment, as well as the waiver of space limitation for two family housing units at St. Louis Support Center. However, execution of construction of these projects is not to commence until the report directed by conference report 99-1005, accompanying the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987, has been received by the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives from the Secretary of Defense.

Pentagon Annex Complex

The report accompanying the Senate amendment (S. Rept. 100-57) directed the Department of Defense to submit a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives no later than October 15, 1987 that would address the types of department activities within the National Capital Region, the numbers of personnel engaged in these activities, and the facilities in which these personnel are currently housed, as well as the prospective need for facilities. The Senate report also requested a master plan that would address alternative approaches for meeting the facility shortfalls of these activities, along with associated economic analyses and environmental evaluations.

The conferees agree that the size of the Department of Defense presence in the National Capital Region, the cost of its operations, and the potential investments required to efficiently support these important activities merit a thorough analysis before the Congress considers further significant facility capitalization in the area. Such an analysis will be required before the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives can consider any additional administrative facilities in the amended fiscal year 1989 military construction authorization budget request.

Therefore, the conferees support the need for the plan already mandated by the Senate report and direct the Secretary of Defense to develop an overall master development plan for the National Capital Region for submittal to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives no later than December 15, 1987. The plan is to address the following:

(1) description of the current Department of Defense presence in the National Capital Region together with a justification for the presence of activities in this high cost area and a description of the current and projected facility needs;

(2) ten year historical audit of the Department of Defense presence in the National Capital Region, including a list of the activities which have been added to or which have left the area, along with associated manpower;

(3) ten year projection of the Department of Defense presence in the National Capital Region with associated facility requirements;

(4) description of current and ten year projections for leases and General Service Administration charges;

(5) rationale and impact of the proposed transfer of the Pentagon Reservation from the control of the General Services Administration to the Department of Defense;

(6) master plan for providing administrative space for essential Department of Defense activities in the National Capital Region including alternative approaches for meeting facility shortfalls along with associated economic analyses and environmental evaluations. The plan and its alternatives are to be coordinated with appropriate planning authorities such as the National Capital Planning Commission.

Fort DeRussy, Hawaii

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2732) that would designate Fort DeRussy, Hawaii, as the primary armed forces recreation center for the Pacific and prohibit the obligation or expenditure of funds available to the Department of Defense for the purpose of selling, renting, excessing, or otherwise disposing of any portion of the land at that location.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2830A) that would permit the Secretary of the Army to convey to the State of Hawaii and the City and County of Honolulu, at fair market value, 45 acres of land at Fort DeRussy. The proceeds from the sale would be used to acquire land and to relocate facilities presently located on that portion of Fort DeRussy. Any remaining receipts would be returned to the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

The conferees agree to delete both provisions.

In light of the mutual interests of the State of Hawaii and the Department of the Army that this property be developed to enhance the current military recreation mission and meet the community's recreational needs, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives no later than March 1, 1988, a report concerning future use and development of the inland portion of Fort DeRussy. The report should provide the Congress the most current data and all reasonable redevelopment alternatives to serve as the basis for possible future action by the Congress on this matter.

As a minimum, this report is to address the following:

1. Department of the Army plans and programs for future expansion of the current recreation center, to include an analysis of need, anticipated time lines, and estimated costs.

2. In addition to addressing possible development within the current ocean side recreation area, the Army is to examine any requirement for use of portions of the 45-acre inland portion of Fort DeRussy in direct support of the current recreation mission and the future expansion of this mission. The proposed usage of specific tracts within this property should be addressed.

3. Relocation alternatives for the Army Reserve units and any other missions currently located on Fort DeRussy that do not directly support the recreation mission. Each relocation alternative is to be accompanied by an analysis of the operational impact of relocation, as well as a current estimate of relocation costs.

4. If it is determined that some portion of Fort DeRussy would be excess to Department of the Army requirements if the above activities were relocated, the Secretary is to obtain a fair market appraisal of such a tract based on the requirement that its reuse would be restricted to redevelopment as a park.

The Congress intends to take no further Congressional action on this matter prior to April 1, 1988, one month after the above report is to be submitted.

Panama

The budget request included $101,290,000 for military construction and family housing for Panama for fiscal years 1988 and 1989.

The Senate amendment contained $47,640,000 for this purpose for fiscal year 1988, but included no authorization for fiscal year 1989.

The House bill denied authorization for construction in Panama for both fiscal years 1988 and 1989.

The conferees approved $11,000,000 for flightline security lighting and for the upgrade of airfield facilities at Howard Air Force Base for fiscal year 1988 and deferred all funding for fiscal year 1989. Because the long term U.S. military presence in Panama is unclear, only those projects of an operational or safety nature have been approved.

TITLE I—ARMY

FISCAL YEAR 1988

The House bill would authorize $2,508,333,000 for Army military construction and family housing programs for fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,661,639,000 for such purposes.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,609,063,000 for military construction and family for fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,536,613,000 at the contingent level.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

School of the Americas, Fort Benning, Georgia

The House bill authorized the Secretary of the Army to use unspecified minor construction funds in the amount of $700,000 for renovation for the School of the Americas at Fort Benning, Georgia.

The Senate amendment authorized appropriations in the amount of $700,000 for the same purpose.

The House recedes.

Hohenfels Training Area, Germany

In view of the progress being made in pursuing the option of District Heat within Germany, the conferees believe the scope of the two projects submitted by the Army for utility upgrade in the Hohenfels Training area can be accomplished within the $51,500,000 project authorized by the House bill and Senate amendment. Accordingly, the second utility upgrade project requested for fiscal year 1988 in the amount of $3,750,000 already provided for the Hohenfels Training Area.

Red River Depot

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained an authorization of $6,500,000 for the site preparation for an Area Oriented Depot (AOD) at Red River Depot, Texas.

The report accompanying the House bill (H. Rept. 100-58) discussed the conferees' previous guidance regarding this project which was contained in conference report (H. Rept. 99-366) accompanying the fiscal year 1986 Military Construction Authorization Act. In that report, the conferees stated that construction of the Red River AOD would not be considered until the Secretary of the Army had reviewed the potential of this project for third-party contracting and had reported the results of this study to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives.

In approving the initial phase of construction of the Red River AOD in fiscal year 1988, the House acknowledged that the above analysis had not been provided to the committees. In fact, it has not even been begun. However, in light of the operational requirement for the project and the potential savings which could be realized through the use of a modern plant, the House believed that construction should begin using military construction funds. In providing the identical authorization in the Senate amendment, the Senate did not address the matter of the outstanding analysis of third-party financed construction.

The conferees believe that the Army's unwillingness to conduct a timely analysis of third-party financing options has denied the service and the Congress the opportunity to ascertain the most cost effective capitalization strategy. However, the need for this facility and the potential savings which are expected from its operation led the conferees to agree to expedite development through a military construction authorization independent of any future studies of third party operation of the center and to rescind their previous guidance to the Army regarding third-party financed construction. The specific timing of construction of the remaining phases of the project should be addressed in the Army's amended fiscal year 1989 budget request.

In electing to construct this facility with military construction funds, the conferees do not make any judgment regarding whether the completed, government-owned facility should be operated with Army employees or through a contract. This determination should be made by the Army under the guidelines of Office of Management and Budget Circular A-76.

Family housing, Fort Drum, New York

The House bill contained an authorization of $10,000,000 for the construction of 100 units of family housing at Fort Drum, New York.

The Senate amendment contained no similar authorization.

The House recedes.

The conferees understand that these 100 units of housing represent those that were deleted from the fiscal year 1987 authorization due to mandatory program adjustments required by deficit reduction legislation. The conferees further understand that the Department of the Army has now asked that the family housing units be deferred and included in the fiscal year 1989 authorization.

The conferees carefully studied the housing requirements and fully support the need to provide the requested 100 units of family housing at Fort Drum. The conferees are also aware that, with the decision to base a Light Infantry Division at Fort Drum, military family housing must be recognized as a top priority in this installation's overall construction requirements. The conferees note that the delivery of family housing constructed under build to lease authority (section 2828(g) of title 10, United States Code) is making some units available immediately at Fort Drum. Additionally, the aviation unit to be stationed at Fort Drum will be initially and temporarily stationed at Griffis Air Force Base, New York, pending the construction of the aviation facilities at Fort Drum which the conferees understand are now included in the Army's fiscal year 1990 program. The conferees understand that housing for this aviation unit can be met by utilizing existing housing in Griffis Air Force Base area in the interim.

The conferees, therefore, concur with the Department of the Army's request that authorization for this project can be deferred until fiscal year 1989 without a significant impact on the construction program. Authorization to construct 100 units of military family housing at Fort Drum has been added to the authorization for fiscal year 1989 which will ensure that these needed units are available in a timely manner.

Kwajalein family housing

With the extremely limited fiscal resources available for the fiscal year 1988 and 1989 program, the conferees primary emphasis is on providing critical operational and training facilities, essential maintenance to the deteriorating physical plant, and direct support to service members and their families. The conferees have, therefore, disapproved $41,000,000 for the construction of 248 family housing units on Kwajalein in the Marshall Islands for contractor personnel engaged in supporting the research and development mission at Kwajalein. Because U.S. military personnel will not use the housing, and because the requirement is directly tied to the research and development effort, the conferees believe it is appropriate to provide for the housing under the Research, Development, Test and Evaluation authorization. The conferees, therefore, direct the Secretary of the Army to investigate lower cost alternative solutions to the contractor housing problem, including the use of research and development funds and/or having contractors provide housing for their own personnel.

FISCAL YEAR 1989

The Senate amendment would authorize $1,760,859,000 for Army military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1989. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes $1,733,069,000 for this purpose.

TITLE II—NAVY

FISCAL YEAR 1988

The House bill would authorize $2,119,390,000 for Navy military construction and family housing programs for fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,398,538,000 for such purposes.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,217,120,000 for military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,143,660,000 at the contingent level.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Stretching out of certain funds for strategic homeporting bases

At a time of severe budget constraints, the Navy requested $337 million for new homeports at ten different locations in the continental United States. This was the first year in which funding was requested for eight of the ten bases. The conferees agreed to authorize approximately $241 million of the request approving at least one project at each base. Some projects were deferred in order that other worthwhile military construction projects contained in the budget request could be funded.

At Naval Station Treasure Island, California, the conferees agreed to defer $22.37 million requested for dredging, pier modifications, utilities and a mess hall, and to approve $38.38 million for 444 units of military family housing to be constructed at Treasure Island and Concord. The conferees continue to have concern over the mitigation of environmental problems identified in the Navy homeport Environmental Impact Statement, the extent and cost of decontamination of land at Hunters Point, and the environmental impact of dredging and disposing of contaminants in the San Francisco Bay.

Because no environmental permits have yet been obtained by the Navy and because of the high probability that contracts could not be executed in this fiscal year, the conferees agree to defer authorization until the environmental problems have been mitigated.

The conferees therefore direct the Secretary of the Navy to provide a report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives by March 1, 1988, on: (1) the extent and estimated cost of the total clean-up at Hunters Point; (2) the cost and environmental impact of dredging and disposing of the materials generated by the homeporting of the USS Missouri and its support ships in San Francisco; (3) the cost and environmental impact of dredging the channel to the Naval Shipyard at Mare Island which is required so that the USS Missouri and support ships can load and unload their weapons; (4) and a comprehensive plan for meeting the housing needs associated with the increased Navy presence in the area.

The conferees do not intend for this action to in any way challenge the Navy's decision to designate San Francisco as one of the ten strategic homeports. Rather, it is an attempt at prudent use of the taxpayers' money while environmental problems identified in the Environmental Impact Statement are being mitigated.

The Secretary of the Navy is expected to provide a revised budget request for this purpose for fiscal year 1989.

Relocation of Navy from Naples

The Secretary of Defense requested a total of $54,900,000 in military construction to support a Navy initiative to relocate its activities from the Agnano area of Naples, Italy, to a new site at Capua. This multiyear initiative is called Project Pronto. The Navy's budget request included $24,900,000 for phase one of construction of a Command and Control, Communications and Intelligence Complex. These funds would be used for site preparation. The Defense Medical Facilities Office request included $30,000,000 to construct a replacement hospital at the Capua site.

The House bill included authorization of $24,900,000 for phase one of the command complex and $30,000,000 for the hospital.

The Senate amendment did not authorize either project.

The Senate recedes with amendment. A total of $19,400,000 is authorized for phase one of the command complex. In authorizing this project, the conferees have agreed only to the need for a modern, consolidated command complex. The conferees remain skeptical of the merits of the overall relocation proposal which could cost as much as $420,000,000 in construction and other expenses. In light of the premier priority which the Navy placed on the homeport development plan last year, a priority ahead of Project Pronto, and the very substantial military construction investment required by the homeporting program, the conferees do not believe that embarking join another major relocation initiative such as Project Pronto is prudent.

The prospective funding levels for military construction in the years ahead suggest that the Congress may be unable to responsively fund both the homeport program and Project Pronto without severely impacting the facility shortfalls and modernization needs of the remaining Navy and Marine Corps installations in the continential United States and overseas. Based upon the priorities which the Navy expressed during the 1986 budget deliberations, the conferees attempted to authorize as much of the homeporting initiative as possible, and authorized only a limited portion of the Project Pronto proposal.

Beyond the issue of affordability, the conferees remain unconvinced of the need to relocate the entire Agnano support complex to Capua. Although the current site is subject to security problems, earthquake hazards, and has other limitations, it is convenient to the NATO Allied Forces South headquarters and other Navy activities in the area. For these reasons, the conferees limited the authorization to partially fund phase one of the command and control complex and urge the Navy to explore alternative ways to improve physical security and access to the Agnano complex.

Although authorizing phase one of construction for the command complex, the conferees are concerned that the Navy has not thoroughly analyzed its operational and support headquarters posture in Europe. Before completing design and requesting authorization for vertical construction of the command complex, the Navy is to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a study of its European headquarters requirements to include national and NATO command and control arrangements, geographic and other key operational considerations, peacetime and wartime operating scenarios, manpower requirements, and programmed construction.

Naval Ordnance Station, Indian Head, Maryland

The conferees note that the nitration facility at the Naval Ordnance Station, Indian

Head, Maryland, the sole domestic manufacturer of a critical weapons fuel, is antiquated and fails to meet modern manufacturing, safety, and environmental standards. The Secretary of the Navy is, therefore, directed to initiate design of a replacement facility so that it may be included in the revised fiscal year 1989 military construction budget request.

Naval Weapons Station, Earle, New Jersey; dredging

The Navy requested $18,600,000 in fiscal year 1988 and $15,900,000 in fiscal year 1989 for dredging at the Naval Station, Earle, New Jersey. The conferees deferred the fiscal year 1988 project due to budgetary constraints and increased the fiscal year 1989 authorization to $18,600,000. The conferees believe that it may be more effective to combine the two dredging projects into one year in order that the dredging may be completed to coincide with the completion of the ammunition pier. Therefore, the Secretary of the Navy is directed to examine this alternative and if appropriate to request and amendment to the fiscal year 1989 authorization in its next budget request.

The conferees understand that completion of all the dredging in fiscal year 1989 will permit operation of the pier at the earliest possible date and will provide a timely opportunity for the State of New Jersey to receive significant quantities of beach quality sands for the communities of Sea Bright/Monmouth Beach in Monmouth County, New Jersey.

FISCAL YEAR 1989

The Senate amendment would authorize $1,122,714,000 for Navy military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1989. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes to $1,144,984,000 for this purpose.

TITLE III—AIR FORCE

FISCAL YEAR 1988

The House bill would authorize $1,990,423,000 for Air Force military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $2,201,083,000 for such purposes.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,109,703,000 for military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $2,002,813,000 at the contingent level.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Munitions Storage Facility Alteration

The Senate amendment would authorize $16,900,000 for the alteration of munitions storage facilities.

The House bill contained no authorization for this purpose.

The House recedes with an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Air Force to reprogram not more than $13,900,000 out of funds appropriated to the Air Force for fiscal year 1988 for the alteration of munitions storage facilities at the following locations:

(1) Buchel Air Base, Germany	$2,000,000
(2) Memmingen Air Base, Germany	2,000,000
(3) Ramstein Air Base, Germany.	9,900,000
	13,900,000

The conferees have approved prefinancing of this program with the understanding that it will become eligible for NATO funding by the middle of 1988 and that recoupment of funds can be expected in the next NATO slice.

Deactivation of Fifth Fighter Interceptor Squadron, Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2733) that would prohibit the obligation and expenditure of any funds in fiscal year 1988 to accomplish the deactivation of the Fifth Fighter Interceptor Squadron (FIS) at Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees, while recognizing the strategic value of transferring the unit's aircraft to a coastal location, remain concerned about maintaining a strong air defense capability in the central United States. The F-15s of the Fifth FIS represent the most modern and capable air defense forces in the region.

Therefore, the Secretary of the Air Force is directed to evaluate options to maintain the current level of peacetime air defense capability in the region, and specifically to examine the feasibility of establishing a permanent air defense alert detachment at Minot Air Force Base. The conferees expect the report of findings on this matter to be submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives no later than March 1, 1988.

The conferees further direct the Secretary of the Air Force to accelerate the modernization of the Air National Guard's air defense unit at Fargo, North Dakota. It is strongly recommended that the programmed conversion from F-4 to F-16 aircraft be accelerated by two years from late 1991 to early 1990 in order to enhance the overall air defense capability in the region.

Minot Air Force Base Education Center

The Air Force has long recognized the importance of educational opportunities in retaining highly trained military personnel, particularly those supporting the arduous mission of operating, maintaining, and securing our strategic deterrent force. The conferees support this effort, but are concerned that adequate educational support facilities have not always been provided. Therefore, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to commence design of a new educational support center programmed at Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota, so that it can be considered for authorization with the amended fiscal year 1989 budget request.

Carswell Air Force Base family housing improvements

As part of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987, the Air Force was provided a waiver authority to improve 203 units of family housing at Carswell Air Force Base Texas, at a total project cost of $7,478,000. Since that time, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives have been advised that the Air Force has reevaluated this project, and rescoped it to 155 units at a total cost of $9,100,000. The conferees have no objection to the Air Force executing this revised improvement plan, provided the Service remains within its total fiscal year 1987 authorization for appropriation for family housing improvements.

FISCAL YEAR 1989

The Senate amendment would authorize $1,164,383,000 for Air Force military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1989. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes to $1,231,213,000 for this purpose.

TITLE IV—DEFENSE AGENCIES

FISCAL YEAR 1988

The House bill would authorize $523,312,000 for military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1988 for the Defense Agencies. The Senate amendment would authorize $776,505,000 for such purposes.

The conferees recommend authorization of $577,076,000 for military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1988.

The conferees recommend authorization of $530,406,000 at the contingent level.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

National Test Facility

The Senate amendment (sec. 2401) would authorize $100,000,000 for construction of the National Test Facility located at Falcon Air Force Station, Colorado.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment (sec. 2150) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to use not more than $70,000,000 of funds appropriated for research, development, test and evaluation for fiscal year 1988 in support of the Strategic Defense Initiative program.

The conferees agree that the National Test Facility will be an important center for the testing of new technologies in support of the Strategic Defense Initiative. The Strategic Defense Initiative Office (SDIO) has made a strong case that this new center is essential if current and programmed research projects are to proceed in a timely and efficient manner. The SDIO made this facility one of its priority initiatives for fiscal year 1988, and represented that it would be required to support its research program at virtually any level of overall funding.

The conferees fully support this initiative, but believe that it is more properly funded with research and development funds, rather than military construction funds, in light of the focused research mission of the facility and its anticipated predominant use by defense contractors. Based upon the budget request for the full amount of construction in fiscal year 1988, the conferees expect that the SDIO will commence construction during this year even though overall program research and development authorization may not permit total project funding in the first year of construction.

Conforming storage facilities (sec. 2409)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2404) that would amend the National Defense Authorization Act of 1987 (Public Law 99-661) to allow the Secretary of Defense to construct needed hazardous waste storage facilities as the environmental permits become available, and would authorize not more than $10,000,000 appropriated in fiscal year 1987 and $11,400,000 appropriated in fiscal year 1988 for the construction of these facilities.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would reduce the authorization to $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1988 because of slow program execution.

The conferees understand this legislation is necessary because the Department of Defense has found it difficult to execute specific projects programmed in advance due to the lengthy permit process.

Brooke Army Medical Center

Section 2403 of the fiscal year 1987 Department of Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) authorized the Secretary of Defense to enter into one or more contracts to design and construct a replacement hospital for the Brooke Army Medical Center, San Antonio, Texas. Section 2403 further provided for design of a medical facility with space for 450 beds, but with initial construction for only 200 beds, expandable to 450 beds when the need can be justified. Section 2401 of that Act provided a total authorization for construction of this project of $135,000,000; however, only $10,000,000 was authorized for appropriations in fiscal year 1987 to begin site preparation.

The Secretary of Defense requested no funds for this project in fiscal year 1988, but requested $23,000,000 for additional site preparation and other construction in fiscal year 1989.

Since the enactment of Public Law 99-661, design of this newly authorized facility has begun. The conferees understand that the initial cost estimate of $135,000,000 is significantly below the actual cost. Although design is still in its initial stages, the current working estimate for the project is now $24,000,000, an increase of $106,000,000.

The House, out of concern for the escalating cost, directed the Secretary of Defense to provide the Congress a report by March 1, 1988, which would update the cost estimate for the authorized project, as well as two other construction options (i.e., a 250 bed expansion of the authorized 200 bed facility, and an initially constructed 450 bed facility). The House further directed the Department of Defense to provide a report regarding the estimated cost associated with the transfer of services from Brooke Army Medical Center to Wilford Hall Medical Center. The House also repealed section 2403(a) of Public Law 99-661, which provided the Department of Defense the authority to contract for this project in advance of appropriations. In a related provision, the House also added authorization of $8,500,000 for a defense access road in support of the new hospital. The House did not address the fiscal year 1989 construction request for this project.

The Senate reaffirmed its commitment to the scope of the project authorized in Public Law 99-661. Recognizing that the initial $135,000,000 cost estimate had changed, the Senate amended last year's authorization, adding $106,000,000 for a total project authorization of $241,000,000. In addition, the Senate authorized the requested $23,000,000 for construction in fiscal year 1989.

The conferees are concerned that the cost of the project has increased significantly from the preliminary estimates used last year as the basis for the $135,000,000 authorization. They believe that any revised project authorization should be used as a "design to cost" target during the ongoing architectural effort and that the final project cost should be compared with the cost of other specified alternatives. Therefore, the conferees agreed to the following:

(1) To direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a report by March 1, 1988, as provided in the House bill;

(2) To amend the fiscal year 1987 authorization to a total project cost of $241,000,000;

(3) To retain the authority to enter into one or more contracts for the project in advance of appropriations if each such contract limits the amount of payments the Federal government is obligated to make under such contract to the amount of appropriations available at the time the contract is entered into;

(4) To authorize $8,500,000 in fiscal year 1988 for a defense access road;

(5) To authorize $23,000,000 for phase two of site work and construction in fiscal year 1989 with the understanding that these funds can not be obligated or expended until all requirements of the National Environmental Protection Act are met.

FISCAL YEAR 1989

The Senate amendment would authorize $169,250,000 for Defense Agencies military construction and family housing for fiscal year 1989. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

TITLE V—NATO

FISCAL YEAR 1988

The House bill would authorize $396,000,000 for the U.S. contribution to the NATO Infrastructure program for fiscal year 1988. The Senate amendment would authorize $386,000,000 for this purpose.

The House recedes.

FISCAL YEAR 1989

The Senate amendment would authorize $402,100,000 for the United States share of the infrastructure program for fiscal year 1989. The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

TITLE VI—GUARD AND RESERVE

FISCAL YEAR 1988

The House bill would authorize $520,918,000 for military construction for fiscal year 1988 for the Guard and Reserve components. The Senate amendment would authorize $545,983,000 for such purposes.

The conferees recommend authorization of $549,517,000 for military construction for fiscal year 1988. The conferees recommend identical authorization at the contingent level. The authorization would be distributed as follows:

Army National Guard	$177,289,000
Army Reserve	88,100,000
Naval/Marine Corps Reserve	68,737,000
Air National Guard	141,091,000
Air Force Reserve	74,300,000
	549,517,000

Air base survivability

The conferees are aware of a recent emphasis within the Air Force to analyze ways to protect overseas air bases from terrorist and wartime battle damage, as well as methods to improve the service's capability to rapidly repair runways and other critical facilities needed to support combat operations. This is an important initiative and the Air Force is commended for focusing on this problem.

In its amended fiscal year 1989 military construction budget, the conferees request that the Air Force highlight those construction initiatives which support air base survivability programs with specific reference to both terrorist and wartime threat assessments associated with specific installations.

It is the conferees' view that the reserve components represent an important source of trained manpower to enhance the Air Force's wartime air base survivability capabilities. The Air Force is urged to closely examine the formation of additional reserve component units to meet this need. Specifically, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Air Force to establish an Air National Guard mission support unit of approximately 300 personnel at Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota. That unit would be expected to deploy during mobilization to repair battle damage to overseas facilities.

FISCAL YEAR 1989

The Senate amendment would authorize $486,923,000 for fiscal year 1989 for the Guard and Reserve components as follows:

Army National Guard	$150,100,000
Army Reserve	100,000,000
Naval/Marine Corps Reserve	52,923,000
Air National Guard	128,000,000
Air Force Reserve	55,900,000

The House bill contained no authorization for Guard and Reserve components for fiscal year 1989.

The conferees agreed to authorize $512,045,000 for fiscal year 1989 to be distributed as follows:

Army National Guard	$168,672,000
Army Reserve	100,000,000
Naval/Marine Corps Reserve	52,923,000
Air National Guard	134,550,000
Air Force Reserve	55,900,000

TITLE VII—EXPIRATION OF AUTHORIZATIONS

FISCAL YEAR 1989

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Expiration of authorizations and amounts required to be specified by law (sec. 2721)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2721) that would provide for the expiration of authorization for fiscal year 1989.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Effective date (sec. 2722)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2722) that would provide for an effective date for fiscal year 1989 authorizations.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

SUBDIVISION 3—GENERAL PROVISIONS

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM CHANGES

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Turn-key selection procedures for Defense Agencies (sec. 2301)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2711) that would amend section 2862 of title 10, United States Code, to extend coverage of this program to Defense Agencies and to require that all services, as well as the heads of the Defense Agencies, obtain the approval of the Secretary of Defense prior to its use.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2814) that would simply include the Defense Agencies under section 2862 of title 10, United States Code.

The Senate recedes.

Long-term facilities contracts (sec. 2302)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2712) that would amend section 2809 of title 10, United States Code, to include hospitals and medical facilities under this program, extend the program through fiscal year 1988 and require a report by February 15, 1988, on the contracts entered into under this authority.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2806) that would also include hospitals and medical facilities under this program and extend the program through fiscal year 1989.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would extend the program through fiscal year 1989.

Settlement of contractor claims (sec. 2303)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2713) that would amend section 160 of title 10, United States Code, to authorize payment for meritorious contractor claims with unobligated construction funds but would limit the appropriation of this provision to funds appropriated after the date of the enactment of this bill.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2815), but the provision would not limit the application of funds to those appropriated after the date of enactment.

The House recedes.

Family housing improvement threshold (sec. 2305)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2715) that would amend section 2825 of title 10, United States Code, to increase the threshold for family housing improvements from $30,000 per unit to $35,000 per unit.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2808) that would have eliminated any improvement limitation.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would raise the threshold to $40,000.

Family housing leasing within the United States (sec. 2306)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2716) that would amend section 2828 of title 10, United States Code, to extend the family housing leasing program to rehabilitated units, provide additional leasing authority for 3,500 units for the Army, 2,000 units for the Navy and 2,100 units for the Air Force. The authorization for the program would terminate at the end of fiscal year 1988.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2811) that would also extend the program to the Secretary of Transportation (Coast Guard) for an additional 300 units and authorize the program through fiscal year 1989.

The House recedes.

Family housing rental guarantee program (sec. 2307)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2717) that would amend section 802 of the fiscal year 1984 Military Construction Act (Public Law 98-115), as amended, to extend the program to rehabilitated units, as well as existing units, and to include the defense agencies under this program. It would permit renewal of a contract if the project were located on government owned land.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2816) but would extend the program to the Secretary of Transportation (Coast Guard) and eliminate the limitation on the number of contracts that could be entered into under the program.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include the Secretary of Transportation, with respect to the Coast Guard, under this provision.

No-cost acquisition of family housing (sec. 2308)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2718) that would amend section 2822 of title 10, United States Code, to add housing units acquired for no cost to the list of the kind of family housing units that may be acquired by the Secretary without being specifically authorized by law. The Secretary would be required to notify the appropriate committees of Congress in writing and wait 21 days before taking action.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2807) but contained a waiting period of only 14 days.

The Senate recedes.

Cost threshold for individual units and maximum number of units leased in foreign countries (sec. 2309)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2719) that would amend section 2828(e) of title 10, United States Code, to increase the foreign family housing rental threshold from $16,800 to $20,000 per unit.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2809) but also increased the number of foreign family housing units that may be leased from 32,000 to 36,000.

The House recedes.

Minor construction outside the United States (sec. 2310)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2721) that would amend section 2805(c) of title 10, United States Code, to prohibit any minor construction related to military exercises outside the United States from being funded through operations and maintenance minor construction account. It would also provide for all exercise related construction to be funded at no more than $5 million from the unspecified minor construction account of each of the services.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would establish separate funding for minor construction related to Joint Chief of Staff (JCS) coordinated/directed exercises outside the United States. It would limit funding of such construction through the operations and maintenance account. It would provide for JCS exercise related construction to be funded at no more than $5 million from the unspecified minor construction account for each of the military services.

This provision is intended to place into permanent law the practice that the Army has been following during the past year and to extend this practice to the other services. The conferees agree that this practice has been helpful in eliminating questions concerning the cost and grouping of projects, particularly those under $200,000. The Secretary of Defense is, therefore, directed to continue to notify the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives of the use of these funds 21 days prior to obligation of the funds. The services are expected to continue to follow the guidelines provided in the statement of managers language contained in conference report 99-1005, accompanying the Continuing Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1987, as to how the costs of these projects should or should not be determined. Minor and temporary structures (e.g., tent platforms, field latrines, funding shelters, range targets) which are completely removed at the end of an exercise may be funded through operations and maintenance accounts, as may construction related to service directed training deployment, as limited by section 2805(c).

Cost threshold for multiple units (sec. 2311)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2810) that would amend section 2828(f) of title 10, United States Code, to increase the threshold for congressional notification for new family housing unit leases overseas from $250,000 to $500,000 per year.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Cost variations (sec. 2312)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2812) that would amend section 2853 of title 10, United States Code, to require cost variation notification to the appropriate committees of Congress only when the cost of the aggregate authorized construction projects at an installation exceeds 125 percent of the authorized value or 200 percent of the amount specified by law as the maximum amount for a minor construction project, whichever is less.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Family housing improvements (sec. 2313)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2813) that would amend section 2853 of title 10, United States Code, to include family housing improvements under the cost variation authority that applies to other military construction projects.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Encroachment on installations

Section 2720 of the House bill contained a provision that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to make grants, conclude cooperative agreements, and supplement funds already made available under Federal programs administered by other Federal agencies to assist local governments in developing land planning around military installations to prevent further encroachment of these installations.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Clarification regarding interchange of supplies and real estate

Section 2802 of the Senate amendment contained a provision that would clarify section 2571 of title 10, United States Code, to include all military property, including excess property, within its no cost transfer authority until such property is actually disposed of by legitimate sale or transfer to another Federal agency.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees are concerned that in some instances, the Office of Management and Budget and the General Services Administration have been reluctant to exercise their existing authority to return real property to the disposing agency when new requirements make the disposal of the property ill-advised. The Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives plan to monitor this situation and develop legislative remedies in coordination with other cognizant committees should the exercise of existing authority in this matter prove untimely or unresponsive to Department of Defense needs.

Minor construction threshold

Section 2804 of the Senate amendment contained a provision that would amend section 2805 of title 10, United States Code, to increase the threshold for minor construction projects from $1 million to $2 million and increase the reporting limit from $500,000 to $1 million.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. Although rationale exists for increasing these limits for unspecified minor construction, projects whose requirements surface after the development of the budget submission, or projects which are too small to warrant lengthy budget review, the conferees believe that this proposal needs further study. Specifically, the committees have received inconsistent information regarding the intended impact of this provision on operations and maintenance funded repair projects. The proposed change would also impact several other statutory provisions.

This proposal appears to be related to a Department of Defense initiative to aggregate all projects valued under the proposed $2,000,000 threshold as unspecified construction. Such a change in budget review was not discussed in hearings or briefings on this provision and would represent a major change in the Congressional review process. Such a change would likely involve a test of a small portion of the overall minor construction request before it would be considered for broader application. The conferees recommend that the Department of Defense conduct a more complete review of this proposal prior to the submission of its fiscal year 1989 amended budget.

Mobilization construction authority

Section 2805 of the Senate amendment contained a provision that would amend chapter 169 of title 10, United States Code, to permit the Secretary of Defense to authorize construction if the President determines that mobilization may be required. Obligation of up to $100 million from unobligated military construction funds would be authorized.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Denial of funds for projects using certain services of foreign countries that deny fair market opportunities

Section 2818 of the Senate amendment contained a provision that would deny the use of appropriated funds for the award of military construction contracts within the United States, its territories or possessions to any foreign firm whose parent nation excludes American firms from bidding on projects in their country.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Pilot program for military family housing (sec. 2321)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2731) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to establish a three-year pilot program to assist local governments to provide increased housing for military families. The Secretary would be authorized to select at least five locations that are severely impacted by the presence of military bases and personnel. Selection criteria would maximize the involvement of the local governments in the creation of additional units of military housing. One million dollars would be authorized to establish this program and the Secretary of Defense would be directed to report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives no later than March 15 of each year on the activities carried out under this program.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Restrictions on use of certain funding (sec. 2322)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2733) that would prohibit the obligation or expenditure of any funds in fiscal year 1988 available to the Department of Defense to close, realign, or deactivate present operations at Nellis Air Force Base, Nevada; Mather Air Force Base, California; the Joint Tactical Command, Control and Communications Agency, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey; Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota; and radar stations at various locations. The provision would also prohibit the closure of the Port Chicago Highway at Naval Weapons Station, Concord, California, and would extend the prohibitions in the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) with respect to dredging activities at Everett, Washington.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes on the provisions relating to the following:

(1) Nellis Air Force Base, Navada;

(2) Joint Tactical Command, Control and Communications Agency, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey;

(3) Extension of the prohibition on the expenditure of funds at Everett, Washington;

(4) Closure of Port Chicago Highway at Naval Weapons Station, Concord, California; and

(5) Radar stations at selected locations.

The House recedes on the provisions relating to Mather Air Force Base, California, and Minot Air Force Base, North Dakota, and radar stations at other selected locations.

Prohibition on funding for certain military construction contracts on Guam (sec. 2323)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2734) that would prohibit the obligation or expenditure of funds under any contract for a military construction project on Guam if any work is carried out by an alien who is on Guam on a work visa. The prohibition would not apply in any case where no acceptable bid is made in response to a solicitation and the Secretary concerned determines that the prohibition is a significant deterrent to obtaining bids and has waited 21 days after notification to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate of the House of Representatives.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Community planning assistance (sec. 2324)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2736) that would authorize $250,000 for community planning assistance at Everett, Washington.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2831) that would authorize $300,000 for community planning assistance for the Gulf Coast homeporting sites for fiscal year 1988 and an additional $300,000 for fiscal year 1989.

The House recedes to the Senate provision, and the Senate recedes to the House provision.

Disposal of real property at Air Force missile sites (sec. 2325)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2829) that would amend chapter 949 of title 10, United States Code, to permit the Secretary of the Air Force to convey at fair market value any land held by the Air Force that does not exceed 25 acres, was used as a site for missile launch facilities, and is surrounded by lands held by one owner or by more than one owner jointly. Owners of the surrounding property would be provided the right of first refusal to purchase these sites.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Settlement of claims with the Tulalip Indians (sec. 2326)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 838) that would provide $3,400,000 to the Tulalip Tribes of Washington to settle a claim against the Navy for loss of access to and displacement from usual and accustomed fishing grounds and stations arising from the construction and operation of the Navy homeport at Everett, Washington.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. It is the conferees intent that the cost of this settlement shall be absorbed within the statutory ceiling of $272,000,000 for construction in support of the homeporting mission at Everett, Washington.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Pentagon annex design

Section 2735 of the House bill contained a provision that would repeal a provision of the fiscal year 1987 Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) that prohibited the use of planning and design funds to initiate design for the Pentagon Annex Complex.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Prohibition on certain cost overruns, Norfolk Navy Steam Plant

Section 2737 of the House bill would prohibit the Secretary of the Navy from paying any claims as specified by the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1987, (Public Law 99-500 and Public Law 99-591) except for losses incurred during the period of October 8, 1986 and the date of enactment of the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1988.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees believe that, because the authorization for payment of claims by the contractor for losses incurred resulting from the construction of the Navy steam plant at Norfolk, Virginia, (Public Law 99-500 and Public Law 99-591) expired September 30, 1987, further legislative action is unnecessary. The conferees further believe that existing statutes provide a procedure for redress of any claims the contractor may have.

Waiver of limitations on leases

Section 2803 of the Senate amendment contained a provision that would amend section 278 of title 40, United States Code, to provide permanent authority in peacetime to waive the current limitations that apply to leases on facilities.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Rental payment cost escalation

Section 2830(B) of the Senate amendment contained a provision that would authorize the service secretaries, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to modify family housing contracts entered into under section 2821 of title 10, United States Code, to reflect amendments contained in section 2713 of the fiscal year 1987 National Defense Authorization Act (Public Law 99-661) which extended the term of the lease period from 15 to 25 years and allowed the rent to escalate. Under the Senate provision, three contracts already awarded, but not yet executed, could be amended to extend the lease period from 15 to 25 years.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The conferees recognize the difficulty housing developers have experienced in obtaining financing for construction under the rental guarantee program. In an effort to make this program more attractive to the financial market, the Congress authorized several program changes in fiscal year 1987, which included extending the term of the lease period from 15 to 25 years and allowing the total rent to escalate rather than just the maintenance fee. The conferees now understand that several projects with contracts awarded under pre-1987 provisions have been terminated or are subject to termination because housing developers have not been able to obtain financing. The conferees support resolicitation of the projects previously authorized incorporating the fiscal year 1987 program changes.

REAL PROPERTY TRANSACTIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Lease of facility, San Francisco, California (sec. 2331)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2741) that would direct the Secretary of Defense to enter into a ten year lease with the City and County of San Francisco, California, for the former United States Public Health Service Hospital located on the Presidio of San Francisco—with the facility to be used for research into and treatment of persons with acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) and acquired immune deficiency syndrome related complex (ARC).

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2830D) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to enter into a ten year lease for the same facility. However, the Secretary would be required to determine the most economically feasible manner to accommodate the transfer of the activities presently housed in the former Public Health Service Hospital and submit the report not later than 90 days after enactment of this legislation to the Comptroller General of the United States for analysis. The Comptroller General would be required to forward the General Accounting Office (GAO) analysis to the Committees on Armed Service of the Senate and House of Representatives within 30 days. The transfer would take place as soon as possible after the GAO report is received by the committees or certification has been received from the County of San Francisco that the county is financially prepared to assume possession of and operate the facility, whichever is later. Joint use with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs should also be considered.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

The conferees agree to direct the lease of the former Public Health Service facility to the City and County of San Francisco without compensation for an AIDS/ARC treatment center. The lease will be entered into no later than January 1, 1989. The Secretary of the Army is to submit by March 1, 1988, to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives, a report analyzing relocation alternatives, their impact on the operations and resources of the Department of the Army, and a description of the preferred location and all costs associated with this choice. By March 1, 1988, prior to the transfer of the facility, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives expect to receive a report from the City and the County of San Francisco that includes a description and validation of the need for acute care nursing for AIDS/ARC patients in the Bay Area and discusses the alternatives and rationale for using the Public Health Service Hospital. The report is to include a financial plan that explains how they expect to meet the initial conversion and recurring operations expenses of the facility.

The conferees are aware of the need to begin the planning for the relocation of the activities currently using the former Public Health Service Hospital and expect operation and maintenance funds from the fiscal year 1988 budget will need to be used in order to meet the specified leasing date. The Secretary of the Army is also expected to begin programming in the fiscal year 1989 budget any construction projects needed to accomplish these moves.

Sale of land and replacement of certain facilities, Kapalama Military Reservation, Hawaii (sec. 2332)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2742) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to sell through a competitive bid process 43.7 acres of real property at Kapalama Military Reservation in Hawaii and use the proceeds to design and construct suitable replacement facilities at various locations.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Land conveyance, Lawrence Township, Indiana (sec. 2333)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2743) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey at fair market value 3.23 acres of land at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, to Lawrence Township, Marion County, Indiana.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2824)

The Senate recedes.

Land transfers: Rock Island Illinois and Fort Sam Houston, Texas (sec. 2334)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2744) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to transfer without reimbursement, certain lands to the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration for use as national cemeteries.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Property transfer, Brooklyn, New York (sec. 2335)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2745) that would authorize the administrator of the General Services Administration to transfer, without reimbursement, a six story building and associated land, known as Dayton Manor, to the Secretary of the Navy for use as military family housing.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Land exchange, Orange County, California (sec. 2336)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2746) that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to carry out a land exchange for Orange County, California.

The Senate amendment contained a similar provision (sec. 2822)

The Senate recedes.

Transfer of land, Joliet Army Ammunition Plant, Illinois (sec. 2337)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2748) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to convey to the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration 200 acres of land located on the Joliet Army Ammunition Plant, Illinois, for use as a national cemetery.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees understand that the Army Toxic and Hazardous Materials Agency is required to perform a study to determine the presence of any hazardous or toxic materials in the land to be transferred, and that the Secretary of the Army is restricted from conveying the property until certification is made that the land is environmentally suitable for transfer. The conferees further direct that any property transferred must be deemed acceptable by the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration as suitable in all respects for use as a national cemetery.

Authority to release certain rights (sec. 2339)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 2750) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to release rights to certain land in Tarrant County, Texas, in exchange for rights to land of equal use that would be obtained from the State of Texas.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Mineral rights at White Sands Missile Range, New Mexico (sec. 2340)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2825) that would authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey certain mineral rights on White Sands Missile Range to the State of New Mexico subject to terms and conditions recommended by the Attorney General of the United States.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Land conveyance, Fort Jackson (sec. 2341)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2826) that would provide additional authority to the Secretary of the Army to use proceeds from a land sale at Fort Jackson, South Carolina, to construct a water system improvements project and improvement to post family housing stock at Fort Jackson.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Land exchange, Hamilton Air Force Base, California (sec. 2342)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2821) that would authorize the Secretaries of the Army and Navy to exchange real property interests with the pending purchaser of certain excess government land at Hamilton Air Force Base, California.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Land conveyance, Chanute AFB, Illinois (sec. 2343)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2828) that would authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to sell at fair market value 49 acres of land near Chanute Air Force Base, Illinois. A condition of the sale would be that certain projects would have to be constructed on base by the prospective purchaser. Any remaining receipts would be returned to the general fund of the Treasury.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Land exchange, San Diego, California (sec. 2344)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 2830) that would authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to negotiate with the County of San Diego, California, for a fair market value exchange of county property for a portion of Air Force Plant #19 or a payment to the government of the difference in the property values. Any agreement reached under this provision would be reported to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives, along with an analysis of the impacts of such a land exchange on current and future programs associated with this industrial facility.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would expand the scope of the required report to include the potential transfer of Plant #19 to another military service and discussion of potential impacts on all defense missions associated with that facility.

Requirement to lease lands to the City of Barling, Arkansas (sec. 2345)

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sec. 2901-2903) that direct the lease of certain lands at Fort Chaffee, Arkansas, to the City of Barling for construction of a city owned wastewater treatment facility or for the expansion, at the city's expense, of the post's wastewater treatment facility to accommodate the city's waste.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees recognize that the alternatives provided to the Secretary of the Army under this provision could entail a potential liability to the Army resulting from environmental hazards associated with the city's sewage. However, this legislation provides the Secretary of the Army the authority to specify conditions necessary to protect the interests of the United States. The conferees expect the Secretary of the Army to exercise this authority to protect the United States from any inequitable liability resulting from any lease executed under this provision.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Use of land at Fort A.P. Hill for Scout Jamborees

Section 2747 of the House bill would authorize the Secretary of the Army to grant a license for the use of land at A.P. Hill, Virginia, as a permanent site for National Scout Jamborees without reimbursement subject to terms and conditions necessary to protect the interests of the United States.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees note that the Department of the Army originally requested that this provision be included in the bill. However, the conferees understand that the Secretary of the Army now indicates that the Army currently has the authority under section 2667 of title 10, United States Code, to allow the Boy Scouts of America (BSA) use of land at Fort A.P. Hill for the National Scout Jamboree. The Boy Scouts have used this location in the past. The conferees further note that Fort A.P. Hill presently supports approximately 200,000 active, Reserve Component, and National Guard soldiers each year.

Based on the successes of past Jamborees, with over 35,000 scouts and 200,000 visitors attending in 1985, the conferees agreed that the continued use of Fort A.P. Hill for the National Scout Jamboree would be desirable. However, the conferees further agreed that training requirements and resources of the Army at Fort A.P. Hill must be maintained. The conferees, therefore, direct the Secretary of the Army to enter into negotiations with the Boy Scouts of America to provide support for the quadrennial National Scout Jamboree under a Memorandum of Understanding consistent with the interests of the Army and the mission of Fort A.P. Hill.

Lease of property, San Diego, California

Section 2823 of the Senate amendment contained a provision that would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to lease approximately 275,000 square feet of dry and cold storage space at the Port of San Diego's 10th Avenue Terminal for up to 30 years.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. Subsequent information available to the conferees indicated that the property referenced in the Senate provision is not the most cost effective alternative available to meet the Navy's storage requirements. In order to ensure that all lease alternatives are competitively developed and that an economic analysis is performed to determine whether a long term lease is more cost effective than military construction, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to pursue fulfilling this requirement under the contractual arrangements of section 2809 of title 10, United States Code.

Asbestos insulation, Fairchild AFB, Washington

Section 2830C of the Senate amendment contained a provision that would require the replacement of asbestos at Fairchild Air Force Base, Washington, for the amount of $2.05 million.

The House bill contained a line item to fund this project.

The Senate recedes.

DIVISION C—OTHER NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATIONS

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

PART A—NATIONAL SECURITY PROGRAMS AUTHORIZATIONS

The House Bill, Division C, Title I, Part A, would authorize appropriations in the total amount of $7,836.074 million. The Senate amendment, Division C, Title I, Part A, would authorize $7,824.4 million. The conferees agreed to an authorization of $7.826.9 million.

Overall the House and Senate differed by only $12 million and have come to an agreement which is $2 million over the Senate level and $9 million below the House level. The conference agreement preserves the emphasis that each house placed on verification and control technologies and on environmental restoration and the management of defense wastes by providing additions to the budget request in each instance. All other areas of the budget were held at or below the request. Because the House bill and the Senate amendment provided essentially the same overall budget amounts, the conference agreement and the contingent level figures are the same.

The budget request, the authorizations contained in the House bill, the authorizations contained in the Senate amendment, and the conference agreement (and contingent level) are detailed in the following table. (Note: The Senate figures throughout reflect restructuring of the request for Environmental Restoration and Management of Defense Waste and Transportation.)

Funding limitations (sec. 3113)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3113) that would: (a) limit use of funds appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 1988 for the Strategic Defense Initiative to $279,000,000; (b) require that not less than $159,000,000 of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1988 be used for the defense inertial confinement fusion program; and (c) provide that no amount appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 1988 for operating expenses for verification and control technology may be used for any other program.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3113) that would: (a) limit the total amount authorized to be appropriated in sections 3111 and 3112 to $7,824,400,000; and (b) provide that the Secretary of Energy shall reduce such projects listed in sections 3111 and 3112 to achieve a total reduction of $270,000,000. The Senate amendment also contained a provision (sec. 3114) that would limit use of funds appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 1988 for the Strategic Defense Initiative to $380,000,000.

The conferees agreed to a provision that would: (a) limit use of funds appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 1988 for the Strategic Defense Initiative to $279,000,000; (b) require that not less than $159,000,000 of funds appropriated for fiscal year 1988 be used for the defense inertial confinement fusion program; and, (c) as more fully discussed under the heading "Short range attack missile (SRAM II)", limit use of funds authorized for the construction of facilities for the warhead for the SRAM II.

Undistributed reductions (sec. 3114)

The Senate amendment included undistributed reductions of $100.6 million in Strategic Defense Initiative related activities, $10 million in naval reactors development, and $260.0 million in other defense activities.

The House bill contained no similar undistributed reductions.

The conferees agreed to an undistributed reduction of $15 million in other defense activities.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Strategic defense initiative

The Administration request included $480.6 million for nuclear directed energy weapons research in support of the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The House bill provided $279 million for nuclear directed energy weapons research in support of the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The Senate amendment provided $380 million.

The conferees agreed to provide $279 million and included a provision (sec. 3124(b)) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to transfer up to $100 million of funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1988 for the Strategic Defense Initiative to the Department of Energy for the nuclear directed energy research program in support of the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Special isotope separation (SIS)

The Administration request included $50 million for operating expenses and $5 million for plant construction for SIS.

The House bill would authorize $80 million for operating expenses and $35 million for plant construction.

The Senate amendment approved the amounts requested.

The conferees agreed to provide $65 million for operating expenses and $20 million for plant construction for SIS.

New production reactor

The Administration request included no funds for a new production reactor.

The House bill would authorize $20 million for construction of a new production reactor.

The Senate amendment would authorize $10 million for operating expenses and $15 million for construction for a new production reactor.

The conferees agreed to authorize $10 million for operating expenses and $10 million for construction for a new production reactor.

New production reactor capacity is to be located on an existing federal reservation at Hanford, Idaho, and/or Savannah River. Each of the reservations is large and remote from major population centers. Presently there are reactors at each of the facilities. New production reactor capacity will incorporate modern standards and will replace older production facilities. Accordingly, the conferees believe that the authorization (and subsequent appropriation of funds for the purpose) of planning, design, and construction of new production reactor capacity is not a major federal action requiring the preparation of an environmental impact statement pursuant to the provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act (section 4321 of title 42, United States Code) until such time as the Secretary of Energy has selected a specific site for the new production capacity.

Enrichment services

The Administration request included $193 million for enrichment services, $178.5 million for the naval reactors program and $14.5 million for other purposes.

The House bill would authorize $153 million for enrichment services, including $141.1 million for the naval reactors program and $11.5 million for other programs.

The Senate amendment would authorize $173 million for enrichment services, including $158.5 million for the naval reactors program and $14.5 million for other programs.

The Senate recedes.

Environmental restoration

The Administration request included $77.798 million for environmental restoration.

The House bill would authorize $97.798 million for environmental restoration.

The Senate amendment would authorize $80.798 million.

The Senate recedes.

Waste management activities

The Administration request included $391.597 million for waste operation and project operating expenses.

The House bill would authorize $411.597 million.

The Senate amendment would authorize $430.597 million.

The Senate recedes.

Verification and control technologies

The Administration request included $95.5 million for verification and control technologies operating expenses.

The House bill would authorize $128.29 million for verification and control technologies operating expenses and included detailed specification for the use of the funds.

The Senate amendment would authorize $120.5 million for verification and control technologies operating expenses and included limitations on the use of the funds.

The conferees agreed to provide $120.5 million for verification and control technologies operating expenses.

General plant projects

The House bill would reduce the authorization for each general plant project by 20 percent for a reduction of $65 million from the Administration request.

The Senate amendment contained no similar reduction.

The House recedes.

Short range attack missile (SRAM)

The Administration request included $37.016 million for facilities for the construction of warheads for the SRAM II missile. The House bill would authorize no funds for facilities for the construction of warheads for the SRAM II missile. Because the Administration request for facilities for construction of warheads for the small intercontinental ballistic missile (SICBM) was reduced because of economies achievable with the joint production of the SRAM II warhead, the House bill also increased funding for the SICBM warhead facilities by $9.4 million over the request.

The Senate amendment would authorize the amounts requested.

The conferees recognize that it is desirable to replace the existing SRAM A warhead with a more modern design and were assured by the Department of Energy that the warhead planned to be constructed for the SRAM II missile could be used to replace existing warheads on the SRAM A missile.

The conferees agreed to authorize funds as contained in the Senate amendment and included a restriction on the use of the funds (sec. 3113(c)). The restriction provides that the $37.016 million for construction of facilities for a new SRAM warhead may be used only for facilities suitable for construction of a warhead that is compatible with the SRAM A and SRAM II and may be obligated only after the Nuclear Weapons Council has certified to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives that the design of the warhead to be constructed in the facility is compatible with the SRAM A and SRAM II.

The House recedes with an amendment.

Process facility modifications

The Administration request included $10 million for process facility modifications at the Purex plant, Richland, Washington (project 84-D-134).

The House bill approved the project as requested.

The Senate amendment authorized no funds for the project.

The House recedes.

PART C—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Allowable costs to include certain information provided to Congress and State legislatures (sec. 3131)

The House passed bill included a provision (sec. 3131) that would make clear that costs incurred by a contractor in responding to a request from the Congress or a state legislature are allowable regardless of whether such request is made through the Department of Energy or otherwise and regardless of whether the information was concurrently provided to the Department of Energy.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Modernization of nuclear weapons complex (sec. 3132)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 3133) that would require the President to submit to the Committees on Armed Services and Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives a plan for the modernization of the nuclear weapons complex. The plan would be required to be submitted by February 15, 1988.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees note that the Department of Energy has underway a number of studies, the results of which will bear directly on a plan for the modernization of the nuclear weapons complex. The studies underway include the management of low-level nuclear waste, an examination of configurations of the nuclear weapons production complex of the year 2010, an acqusition strategy for a new production reactor, a study of the appropriate size and composition of the weapons research, development and test complex, and a long range plan for environmental health and safety activities.

In order to permit the completion of the ongoing Department of Energy studies and their incorporation into the plan required by the provision the conferees agreed to the House provision with an amendment that would revise the submission date of the plan to December 15, 1988.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Requirements to ensure safe operation of N reactor (sec. 3133)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 3137) that would require that the Secretary of Energy request the National Academy of Sciences to submit a report relating to the safety of operation of the N reactor by October 1, 1987. The provision also provided that the N reactor not be operated until the Secretary of Energy certified that the N reactor is safe to operate and in any event not before November 1, 1987.

The Senate amendment included no similar provision. The Senate bill provided no funds for the operation of N reactor and the report accompanying the bill directed that the reactor be placed in a "cold" standby status that would minimize the cost of maintaining the reactor in an indefinite standby status.

The conferees agreed to a provision that would require that the Secretary of Energy request the National Academy of Sciences to submit a report relating to the safety of operation of the N reactor by December 1, 1987. The provision would also provide that the N reactor not be operated until the Secretary of Energy certifies that the N reactor is safe to operate and in any event not before January 1, 1988.

In the event that the Department of Energy is unable to make a timely restart of the N reactor the conferees direct that funds that are provided for operation of N reactor be used to (in order of priority):

1. Place N reactor in a "cold" standby status;
2. Accelerate planning, design and, if possible, construction of a new production reactor; and
3. Accelerate construction of the Special Isotope Separation facility.

Beginning on January 1, 1988, and monthly thereafter until N reactor is restarted or a decision is made to place the reactor in "cold" standby status, the Secretary of Energy shall report in writing to the Committees on Armed Services and Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives on the status of the N reactor and the Department's planned date for restart of operations.

Interim oversight of safety of the nuclear weapons complex (sec. 3134)

The House bill included a provision (sec. 3136) that would establish an annual review and report on the status of the nuclear weapons complex by the National Academy of Sciences. The provision would also require that the Secretary of Energy submit comments on the report and describe the plans of the Secretary to correct any technical problems described in the report or carry out recommendations set forth in the report.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees note that the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives have legislation pending before them that would create permanent oversight for the nuclear weapons complex. The conferees would also note that the president of the National Academy of Sciences has suggested that the Academy might better be viewed as an interim mechanism for oversight while more permanent institutional responses are designed and implemented. Accordingly the conferees agreed to an interim oversight provision that would provide for two annual reviews and reports on the status of the nuclear weapons complex by the National Academy of Sciences.

The Senate recedes with an amendment.

Timely determination on property rights in inventions and discoveries (sec. 3135)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3132) that would provide that title to a patent for which the contractor has requested title shall pass to the contractor if the Secretary of Energy fails to act on the request within 180 days.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment.

The conferees were in agreement that the Secretary of Energy should take prompt action on requests for title. However the House conferees were unwilling to allow title to pass automatically if the Secretary failed to act promptly. Accordingly, the conferees agreed to a provision that would require the Secretary of Energy to act on a request for title to a patent within 150 days of receipt of a complete request, and require that the Secretary report to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives within 10 days after the end of the 150 day period if he fails to act within the period. The provision would further provide that filing of a report does not relieve the Secretary of the requirement to make a decision and that reports shall be filed at the end of each 30-day period after submission of the first report during which the Secretary continues to fail to make the decision required by the provision. The requirements of the provision would be effective March 1, 1988.

The conferees direct the Secretary of Energy to submit a copy of the draft regulations implementing the provision to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives not later than March 1, 1988 and to submit an additional report, not later than 1-year after date of enactment, containing:

a. the final regulations implementing the provision;

b. an evaluation of the 150 day period for action, including an evaluation of increasing or decreasing the period; and

c. any other information or recommendations the Secretary deems appropriate for improving the transfer of technology developed in defense activities of the Department of Energy to the private sector, while protecting national security interests.

Acquisition strategy for a new production reactor (sec. 3136)

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3133) that would require the Secretary of Energy to submit a report addressing the acquisition strategy for new reactor production capacity not later than February 1, 1988.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Livermore National Laboratory

The House passed bill included a provision (sec. 3132) that would redesignate the Ernest Orlando Lawrence Livermore Laboratory as the Livermore National Laboratory.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Limitation on nuclear testing

Section 3135 of the House bill directed that funds appropriated for fiscal year 1988 may not be expended or obligated to carry out a nuclear explosion with a yield over 1 kiloton, or a nuclear explosion outside a designated test area, unless the President certifies that one of the following conditions are met: (1) the Soviet Union has carried out a nuclear explosion in excess of 1 kiloton yield or outside a designated test area; (2) the Soviet Union has refused to accept and implement certain reciprocal in-country monitoring arrangements capable of detecting and identifying decoupled nuclear explosions with yields exceeding 1 kiloton. The limitation on nuclear explosions is also removed if the United States and the Soviet Union reach an agreement or treaty that establishes significant limits on nuclear explosions.

The Senate bill contained no such provision.

The House recedes.

Repeal of limitation on MX warheads

The Senate amendment contained a provision (sec. 3131) that would repeal section 1426(a) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1986 that provided that no funds may be obligated or expended for the production of W-87 warheads for the MX missile program in excess of the numbers of warheads required to arm the number of such missiles authorized by the Congress to be deployed and determined by the President to be necessary for quality assurance and reliability testing.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

PART D—THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY SEMICONDUCTOR TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH EXCELLENCE INITIATIVE

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sec. 3141-3151) that would establish a semiconductor technology research excellence initiative (hereafter referred to as the initiative) within the Department of Energy. The amendment would provide that the Secretary of Energy is to initiate and conduct a program of research on semiconductor manufacturing technology and on the practical applications of the technology in the national laboratories operated by the Department of Energy. Research activities would be conducted through cost-sharing agreements with private firms and universities which would allow access to the facilities and equipment of the national laboratories and would provide for exchanges of personnel.

Section 3141 would make certain findings concerning the need for the initiative.

Section 3142 would establish the initiative as a program of the Department of Energy and would require that the program be conducted to complement the activities of the consortium of United States semiconductor manufacturers, materials manufacturers, and equipment manufacturers, established for conducting semiconductor research.

Section 3143 would provide that each national laboratory of the Department of Energy should participate in research projects under the initiative in conjunction with the Department of Defense, any consortium, college or university carrying out such a project for or in cooperation with the consortium referred to in section 3142, to the extent that such participation does not detract from the primary mission of the national laboratory. The section would also require the Secretary of Energy to enter into agreements to carry out the initiative. Finally, the section would require that one or more national laboratories conduct research activities relating to semiconductor manufacturing technologies.

Section 3144 would require that the initiative provide for the temporary exchanges of personnel between participants in the initiative.

Section 3145 would allow the Secretary of Energy to make available to Federal agencies and to a consortium participating in the intitiative resources of the Department of Energy for the purposes of the initiative.

Section 3146 would require that the Secretary of Energy provide (in budgets prepared for submission to Congress) for programs, products, and activities that encourage the development of new technology in the field of semiconductors.

Section 3147 would permit the Director of a national laboratory, or the contractor operating a national laboratory, to enter into agreements with domestic firms in connection with the initiative that provide for the domestic firm to pay a portion of the cost of research activities. The section would also require that the director of each national laboratory submit a proposal to the Department of Energy defining cost sharing arrangements and the appropriate level of funding for approval. Finally, except as otherwise approved by the Secretary of Energy, the section would limit the amount of a national laboratories budget that may be derived from non-appropriated funds contributed by participants in the initiative to 1 percent of the total budget and would further limit the total amount received under any single agreement to $10 million.

Section 3148 would allow the Secretary of Energy to review agreements entered into under section 3147 during a ninety day period after such agreements are submitted to the Secretary.

Section 3149 would require that the Secretary of Energy ensure that unnecessarily duplicative research is not performed at research facilities involved in the initiative.

Section 3150 would authorize appropriations to the Department of Energy of $25 million for each of the years 1988 and 1989 and provide that such funds are in addition to amounts available to the Department of Defense for semiconductor manufacturing technology research.

Section 3151 would require that the Secretary of Energy adopt procedures to provide for the timely and efficient transfer of semiconductor technology developed under the initiative under law and regulations applicable to the Department of Defense. The section would also require that the Secretary of Energy transmit a plan for commercialization enhancement of semiconductor technology and information developed under the initiative to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, and the Committee on Science and Technology of the House of Representatives.

The House bill contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed to a provision that would establish a semiconductor technology research excellence initiative (hereafter referred to as the initiative) within the Department of Energy. The provision would direct the Secretary of Energy to initiate and conduct a program of research on semiconductor manufacturing technology and on the practical applications of the technology in the national laboratories operated by the Department of Energy. Research activities could be conducted through cost-sharing agreements with private firms and universities which could allow access to the facilities and equipment of the national laboratories and could provide for exchanges of personnel.

Section 3141 would make certain findings concerning the need for the initiative as contained in the Senate amendment.

Section 3142 would establish the initiative as a program of the Department of Energy and would permit the program to be conducted to complement the activities of the consortium of United States semiconductor manufacturers, materials manufacturers, and equipment manufacturers, established for conducting semiconductor research.

Section 3143 would permit each national laboratory of the Department of Energy to participate in research projects under the initiative in conjunction with the Department of Defense, any consortium, college or university carrying out such a project for or in cooperation with the consortium referred to in Section 3142, to the extent that such participation is consistent with the missions of the national laboratory. The section would also authorize the Secretary of Energy to enter into agreements to carry-out the initiative and require that one of more of the national laboratories participate in the initiative.

Section 3144 would authorize the Secretary of Energy to permit the temporary exchange of personnel between the national laboratories and non-governmental participants in the initiative.

Section 3145 would allow the Secretary of Energy, subject to reimbursement, to make available to federal agencies and to any consortium participating in the initiative resources of the Department of Energy for the purposes of the initiative.

Section 3146 would require that the Secretary of Energy, to the extent that he deems appropriate and necessary, provide in budgets prepared for submission to Congress for programs, products, and activities that encourage the development of new technology in the field of semiconductors. Any such funds included in the budget would be required to be included in the budget for general science and research activities except to the extent that funding directly supports and has direct benefit to the defense programs of the Department of Energy it would be required to be included in the budget for atomic energy defense activities of the Department of Energy.

Section 3147 would permit the director of a national laboratory that is participating in the initiative, consistent with a contract with the Department of Energy, to enter into agreements with domestic firms in connection with the initiative that provide for the domestic firm to pay a portion of the cost of research activities. Except to the extent approved in advance by the Secretary of Energy the section would limit the amount of a national laboratories budget that may be derived from non-appropriated funds contributed by participants in the initiative to 1 percent of the total budget and would further limit the total amount received under any single agreement to $10 million.

Section 3148 would allow the Secretary of Energy to review agreements entered into under section 3147 during a ninety day period after such agreements are submitted to the Secretary.

Section 3149 would require that the Secretary of Energy ensure that unnecessarily duplicative research is not performed at research facilities involved in the initiative.

Section 3150 would authorize the appropriation of $25 million for general science and research activities of the Department of Energy under the initiative.

Section 3151 would require that the Secretary of Energy adopt procedures to provide for the timely and efficient transfer of semiconductor technology developed under the initiative. The section would also require that the Secretary of Energy transmit a plan for commercialization enhancement of semiconductor technology and information developed under the initiative to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, and the Committee on Science and Technology of the House of Representatives.

TITLE II—NATIONAL DEFENSE STOCKPILE

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

The House bill contained the following sections related to the National Defense Stockpile:

Section 3202 would amend section 2 of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (section 98a of title 50, United States Code) by restating (a) that Congress intends the National Defense Stockpile to be used to serve the interest of national defense only and not to be used for economic or budgetary purposes and (b) that the quantities of materials stockpiled under the Act should be sufficient to sustain the United States for a period of not less than three years during a war emergency that would necessitate total mobilization of the economy of the United States for a conventional global war of indefinite duration.

This section would also require that the quality, quantity and form of each material acquired and stored in the stockpile be established by law. Until Congress establishes new stockpile requirements, the stockpile goals as of October 1, 1984 would remain in effect.

Section 3203 would transfer management of the stockpile to the Secretary of Defense.

Section 3204 would direct the Secretary of Defense to submit an annual report of his recommended requirements for the National Defense Stockpile based on total mobilization of the economy of the United States for a conventional global war for a period of not less than three years.

Section 3205 would authorize the Secretary of Defense to enter into reimbursable agreements with any other department or agency relating to stockpile management. The section would also authorize appropriations for the Department of Defense for the operation and management of the stockpile.

Section 3206 would amend section 9(b)(2) of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act (section 98h(b)(2) of title 50, United States Code), by striking out subparagraph (F) which permits use of the transaction fund for other reasonable requirements for management of the stockpile.

The Senate amendment contained the following sections related to the National Defense Stockpile:

Section 3201 would permit changes in the current inventory goals of the National Defense Stockpile (i.e. those inventory goals in effect on October 1, 1984) only if the changes are first outlined in the Annual Materials Plan for that fiscal year. Any change in stockpile goals proposing a reduction greater than ten percent in any fiscal year of the quantity of the inventory goal of an item in the stockpile, or elimination of any item from the inventory goals of the stockpile, could be made only after approval by the Congress through legislation.

Section 3202 would require submission of the Annual Materials Plan to Congress no later than February 15 of each year.

The conferees agreed to the following sections related to the National Defense Stockpile:

Section 3202(a) would permit the President to make changes in stockpile requirements for any item in the stockpile by up to ten percent of the requirement in effect as of September 30, 1987 provided the necessary justification is included in the Annual Materials Plan.

Any change in the stockpile goals in excess of ten percent could be made only to the extent expressly authorized by law.

Under this section, if reports required by sections 11(b) and 14 of the Stock Piling Act are not made to Congress on a timely basis, no changes could be made to stockpile goals in the next fiscal year.

Section 3202(b) would establish the principles under which the Congress intended the National Defense Stockpile to operate: (a) to serve in the interest of national defense only and not to be used for economic or budgetary purposes and (b) to maintain quantities of materials stockpiled under the Act sufficient to sustain the United States for a period of not less than three years during a war emergency that would necessitate total mobilization of the economy of the United States for a conventional global war of indefinite duration.

Section 3202(c) would require the Secretary of Defense to submit an annual report to Congress on stockpile requirements, setting forth national emergency planning assumptions used in determining such requirements, based upon total mobilization of the economy of the United States for a sustained conventional global war for a period of not less than three years. This section would also require the President to submit, through the Stockpile Manager, a report setting forth the plans of the Administration for meeting the requirements for the stockpile as recommended by the Secretary of Defense.

Section 3203 delineates the responsibilities of the National Defense Stockpile Manager to include the functions of the President under the Act, other than under sections 7, 8 and 13.

The section also, during any period in which there is no incumbent in the position of National Defense Stockpile Manager, would prohibit the Executive Branch from taking action under section 6(b) or 6(d) of the Stock Piling Act.

Finally the section would, effective 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, revoke Executive Order 12155.

Section 3204 would repeal authority for using the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund for other reasonable requirements in management of the stockpile.

Section 3205 would establish February 15 of each year as the deadline for submission of the Annual Materials Plan to Congress.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS NOT ADOPTED

Transfer of certain stockpile functions to the Secretary of Defense

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3203) that would transfer management of the stockpile to the Secretary of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The conferees agreed that the Administration and the present National Defense Stockpile Manager should be given further time to demonstrate whether or not the Stockpile Program and National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund can be successfully managed under existing law before changes are made.

The House recedes.

Stockpile management

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3205) that would provide authority to the Secretary of Defense to enter into reimbursable agreements with any other department or agency relating to stockpile management. The section would also authorize appropriations for the Department of Defense for the operation and management of the stockpile.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

TITLE III—CIVIL DEFENSE

CIVIL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION

The President's budget request contained $154.8 million for civil defense for fiscal year 1988.

The House bill and the Senate amendment both contained provisions (sec. 3301) that would authorize $134.8 million for fiscal year 1988 to carry out the provisions of the Federal Civil Defense Act of 1950.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Prohibition (sec. 3302)

The House bill contained a provision (sec. 3302) that would prohibit the obligation or expenditure of funds available to the Federal Emergency Management Agency for fiscal years 1987 and 1988 from being withheld or withdrawn at any time from any State or any other entity on the basis of such State or other entity's failure to participate, or determination not to participate, in a simulated nuclear attack exercise.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

THE 1988 DEFENSE BUDGET UNDER A SEQUESTER

As the conferees completed action, uncertainty existed whether there would be a sequester of fiscal year 1988 funds (and, if there were a sequester, the amount of the sequester). The Gramm-Rudman legislation established the maximum sequester as that necessary to reduce outlays by $23 billion. The actual sequester could be less if tax increases or spending reductions are enacted before November 20. Additionally, the actual sequester for defense could be further reduced if the full year appropriation bill is enacted after November 20 and if individual accounts in the enacted appropriation bill are less than the amounts assumed in the budget "baseline" (the baseline for the defense function totals $303 billion).

This section describes the impact of a sequester in defense under two different cases. In the first case it is assumed that a full $23 billion sequester is applied (with half applied to individual defense accounts) as set out in the Gramm-Rudman legislation. Each account, except the military personnel accounts which were exempted from sequester by the President, is reduced by 10.4 percent below the baseline amount. In the second case the same $23 billion sequester is assumed but the operation and maintenance accounts, which are most directly related to near-term readiness, are protected from the full sequester so that they are reduced to a level 5 percent below the baseline. All other accounts must compensate for the relative sheltering of the O&M accounts and, thereby, are reduced 19 percent below the baseline level in this case to achieve the required outlay reductions.

In the first case fiscal year 1988 budget authority for the national defense function would be reduced from the baseline level of $303 billion to $279 billion and an additional $5 billion of prior year balances would be sequestered. In the second case, budget authority would be reduced to $271 billion, and the reduction in prior year balances would remain at $5 billion.

The Gramm-Rudman Act specifies that each program, project and activity must be reduced by the same uniform percentage. The Act does not permit the President and the Congress to offer revised sequester orders that tailor the sequester, cutting some programs more heavily in order to minimize the reduction in other programs. The sequesters described here have not been done in a uniform manner—reductions in every program, project, and activity—as called for in the legislation. Rather the attempt has been to describe how reductions might be imposed within individual accounts in two alternative plans that could be implemented by the Congress.

Although the President has exempted the military personnel accounts from sequester, the baseline for the military personnel accounts is substantially below the conference recommendation. Accordingly the discussion includes reductions that could be made to reduce the military personnel accounts to the baseline level that is the basis for sequester calculations.

The subsequent discussion will address the assumed sequesters for the major categories in the defense budget.

PROCUREMENT

In the event of a sequestration (Case I), the procurement accounts would be reduced by an additional $1.4 billion from the conference agreement and $5.6 billion below the President's request. If the operation and maintenance accounts were to be protected (Case II), the procurement accounts would be reduced further—by an additional $8.9 billion from the conference agreement and $13.2 billion below the President's request. The following table provides the details of the sequestration levels by service.

Procurement

[In millions of dollars]

	Conference level	Budget after sequestration
		Case I O&M not protected	Case II O&M protected
Army	16,618	14,925	13,493
Navy/MC	31,780	30,928	27,960
Air Force	29,192	31,773	28,722
Defense Agencies	1,293	1,421	1,285
Guard/Reserve	703	520	470
Chemical demilitarization	125	111	100
Total	79,711	79,678	72,030

Due to the magnitude of the proposed sequestrations, several general policy guidelines would govern their implementation. In general the policies would include: postponing new starts; eliminating all program increases; terminating weapon systems that are duplicative or where program performance appears to be marginal.

Either of these sequester proposals would reverse the majority of the initiatives included in this conference report, and seriously disrupt any production efficiencies. As a starting point, such a sequestration would include authorization of only those programs included at the contingency level of $289 billion.

By way of illustration, a sequestration could also have the following impacts:

Army

Eliminate new starts, such as the RC-12 reconnaissance airplane, Army Tactical Missile System (ATACMS).

Cripple congressional initiatives to bolster production rates for Army programs (AH-64 helicopter, AHIP helicopter, Blackhawk helicopter, M1 tank, 10-ton trucks, ammunition items).

Break multiyear contract (Patriot missile system).

Disrupt $1 billion fixed price contract (Mobile Subscriber Equipment (MSE)).

Stretch out planned increases in communications programs, such as night vision goggles, and aviation survivability equipment.

Navy

Reduce Trident II D-5 missile procurement by one-third from 72 to 48 missiles.

Reduce Trident II D-5 missile advanced procurement for fiscal year 1989 by eight missiles from 66 to 59.

Halve the AIM-54C Phoenix air-to-air missile program eliminating the second source producer.

Stretch out procurement of the AGM-88A HARM anti-radiation missile program.

Stretch out procurement of the SM-2 standard missile program, eliminating the second source producer.

Halve procurement of the joint German/American rolling airframe missile (RAM) surface-to-air missile program.

Eliminate second-source efforts for the MK-50 advanced lightweight torpedo. Stretch out procurement of MK-48 advanced capability torpedoes.

Reduce authorization for Aegis cruiser by one (at $800 million) from four fully funded in the conference agreement.

Reduce antisubmarine and antiair warfare upgrades for existing ships, including the FFG-7 class frigates.

Marine Corps

Defer production start of the M1 tank for the Marines.

Stretch out the Stinger air defense missile system.

Air Force

Terminate two tactical missile programs (Sparrow and Sidewinder).

Reduce AMRAAM.

Reduce capability to suppress enemy air defenses (HARM).

Impose production gap in advanced cruise missile program.

Cripple space launch recovery program (medium launch vehicle).

Eliminate second source on major munitions program (combined effects munitions).

Reduce tactical communications modernization program (TRI-TAC).

Cripple readiness and sustainability (electronics/communications spares).

Delay NATO special weapons storage/security program (weapons storage facility).

Delay air base operability enhancement (mobile armored reconnaissance vehicle).

Guard and Reserve

Stop Guard airlift modernization program (C-130H).

Reduce Army Reserve combat support modernization program (miscellaneous equipment).

Chemical Demilitarization

Reduce operations for existing stockpile.

Delay research and development of alternate technologies.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

In the event of a sequestration (Case I), the Research and Development accounts would be reduced by an additional $4.5 billion from the conference agreement (and $10.1 billion below the President's request—a 23 percent reduction from the request).

If operation and maintenance accounts were to be protected (Case II), the Research and Development accounts would be reduced further—by an additional $7.7 billion from the conference agreement (and by a total of $13.4 billion, or 31 percent from the request.

The conferees imposed reductions totaling $7.7 billion at the contingent authorization level. The sequester adjustments had to be made from this lower level. A sequestration would place research and development spending in fiscal year 1988 between $30.4 and $33.6 billion. In real terms, that was the level of spending in fiscal year 1984.

GENERAL APPROACH

Adjusting the budget request to these dangerously low numbers by imposing cuts on many different programs would not be workable. In addition, the budget situation will likely impose reductions in subsequent years. Therefore, the following general guidelines for making these reductions is suggested:

(1) maintain stability for major programs nearing the end of full-scale development;

(2) emphasize programs that offer improvements to existing fielded systems; and

(3) seriously review the affordability of major new programs just entering development

Using these guidelines, the following actions represent the impact of a sequester.

REDUCTIONS IN THE TECHNOLOGY BASE

A 23 percent across the board reduction in the technology base, in advanced technology development, in intelligence programs and in defense mission support programs could be imposed. Reductions of this size in the technology base would mortgage the future by slowing the development of promising new scientific breakthroughs. Reductions in the intelligence programs and in defense mission support activities would probably necessitate civilian reductions in force (RIF) at the laboratories and ranges that support the research and development establishment.

TERMINATING MAJOR NEW PROGRAMS

Reductions of this magnitude could require termination of major programs. In addition, a sequester in fiscal year 1988 could well be followed by sequesters in subsequent years. Terminating major new programs in fiscal year 1988 is the only method available for minimizing future disruptions. The following programs might be terminated should a sequester order be imposed.

LHX helicopter

The LHX helicopter is the Army's effort to develop a new generation helicopter to replace some 7,000 aging operationally obsolete scout and utility helicopters. Termination would require the Army to operate those obsolete helicopters for a much longer period, with resulting increases in operating and support costs.

Air Defense improvements

The Army is in the initial stages of improving air defense after the decision to terminate the Sgt. York Division Air Defense system. These improvements are critical, but a sequester could necessitate suspension of the Forward Area Air Defense and command and control programs that are the cornerstone of the modernization program.

V-22 tilt rotor

The termination of the V-22 tilt rotor would deny the Marine Corps a modern combat assault airlift capability and would force the Navy to operate aging and obsolete CH-46 helicopters indefinitely. The Air Force and Army had been planning to buy variants of the V-22 for use in special operations. Although this program is substantially into full-scale development, it might not fit in a budget reduced by a sequestration.

SRAM II

The SRAM II is intended to provide modern missiles for use by strategic bombers. Termination of SRAM II would require the new B-1s and Advanced Technology bombers to operate under the tactical limitations of the SRAM A which was first fielded in the mid-1970s.

ICBM programs

The sequester could force reductions in the rail mobile MX and the small ICBM, effectively terminating these programs. Both programs are critical for providing survivable and non-destabilizing ICBM capability for the future which is critical for purposes of maintaining deterrence during a period of growing Soviet abilities to target and destroy fixed missile silos.

PROGRAM REDUCTIONS

In addition, the following programs could be significantly delayed:

(1) Patriot ATBM.
(2) ASAT.
(3) C-17.
(4) SDI.
(5) Trident II missiles.
(6) Advanced Tactical Aircraft.
(7) P-3 Modernization.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

In the event of a sequester (Case I), the operation and maintenance accounts would be reduced by $11.8 billion from the fiscal year 1988 budget request and $9.0 billion below the conference agreement. These reductions would leave the fiscal year 1988 operation and maintenance funding level at $74.8 billion, which is below the fiscal year 1985 funding level in current dollars and below the fiscal year 1983 funding level in constant dollars.

If the operation and maintenance accounts were to be protected (Case II), they would still be reduced by $7.7 billion below the fiscal year 1988 budget request and $4.9 billion below the conference agreement. These reductions would leave the fiscal year 1988 operation and maintenance funding level at $78.9 billion, the fiscal year 1987 level.

A large proportion of the operation and maintenance funding in the near term represents fixed costs—utilities, rent, and salaries for civilian employees who work on military installations. Those operation and maintenance costs which contribute most to near-term readiness—flying hours, steaming time, training exercises, real, property maintenance and equipment maintenance—are the easiest to control in the near term. These variable readiness-related costs would bear the brunt of large reductions in the operation and maintenance accounts under sequestration.

The two sequester alternatives would reduce the fiscal year 1988 budget request for the operation and maintenance accounts below the minimum level of funding necessary to maintain the current operating levels and readiness of our military forces.

The table below summarizes the reductions in the operation and maintenance accounts under the unmodified and modified sequesters and compares both levels to the fiscal year 1988 budget request and the authorization level contained in the conference agreement.

ARMY

The conferees recommend a reduction of $579.7 million to the Army operation and maintenance account. Sequestration (Case I) increases this reduction to approximately $2.7 billion. If the O&M accounts were to be protected (Case II), the reduction to Army O&M would be approximately $1.6 billion. Both cases would result in lower operating tempo, reduced training time and lower unit equipment readiness in the Army in fiscal year 1988.

Operation and support of its general purpose forces consumes 36 percent of the Army's operation and maintenance budget. A sequester would reduce the Army's ground operating tempo below the 750 miles per year in the fiscal year 1988 budget, the level which was achieved in fiscal year 1987. Air operating tempo, budgeted at 15.8 hours per crew per month, would probably drop to 14 hours per crew per month. Funds to support the fielding of new weapon systems would also be reduced.

Training tempos would also be effected. The Army planned to participate in 59 JCS directed or coordinated exercises in fiscal year 1988. A sequestration would force the Army to scale back or even cancel participation in some of these exercises.

Equipment readiness would be severely affected at either sequester level. The fiscal year 1988 budget request for Army O&M met only 79 percent of the annual depot maintenance requirement. Because one-quarter of the Army's operation and maintenance account supports depot supply and maintenance operations, the sequester would result in a large growth in the Army's depot maintenance backlog in fiscal year 1988.

The backlog of real property maintenance, already projected to grow in the Army's fiscal year 1988 budget request, would also increase dramatically under sequester alternatives.

NAVY

The conferees recommend a reduction of $788.8 million to the Navy operation and maintenance account. Sequestration (Case I) would result in this reduction rising to approximately $3.6 billion. If the O&M accounts were to be protected (Case II), the reduction to the Navy O&M account would be approximately $2.3 billion. The impact of a sequester is dramatic and would result in serious question regarding the Navy's ability to maintain current operating levels and force readiness.

Without some level of force structure reduction or some significant change in current Navy mission, several factors limit reductions to various areas of Navy O&M. For example, reducing funding for direct care medical programs results in an increase to "must pay" CHAMPUS costs. Similarly, without changing the operating tempo (OP-TEMPO) of Persian Gulf operations, reducing Navy ship steaming days or the flying hour program would be difficult. Much of the non-deployed OPTEMPO costs are related to training and to preparing units for rotational replacement of ships and squadrons currently deployed to the Persian Gulf. However, some level of reduction would have to be made in ship steaming days and aircraft flying hours under sequestration. This reduction could range from $150 to $300 million. A reduction of this magnitude would result in a degradation of primary mission readiness rates, particularly for non-deployed units, which could drop from a current 87 percent primary mission readiness to between 70 to 75 percent. Non-deployed ship average steaming days per quarter would decline from 29 days to 18 or 19 days. Average aircraft flight crew time would decline from 24 to 20 or 21 hours per month.

Reductions would result in Near Term Prepositioning Ships and newly delivered hospital ships being placed in reduced operating status rather than operational status. Support for the Ready Reserve force would be reduced. Individual training and specialized skills training would decrease the number of qualified personnel entering fleet units. Unit training and exercise participation would be reduced due to lack of equipment, supplies, and special funding. Spare parts would decline as inventory is consumed without replacement. Discretionary quality-of-life programs would also be greatly reduced or eliminated.

Real property maintenance would necessarily sustain significant reductions. Potentially, only emergency repairs would be funded and most other work would be deferred causing serious asset deterioration (and increasing long range costs). A reduction of $250 million in fiscal year 1988 would result in the backlog growing to over $1.3 billion.

Under a sequestration, the $6 billion depot maintenance/modernization programs would have to be reduced dramatically. This reduction would likely fall between 20 and 25 percent which would mean deferring or canceling 6 to 8 of the 31 overhauls scheduled for fiscal year 1988. Any substantial reduction in workload associated with public facilities (Navy shipyards and Naval Aviation Depots) would logically result in some reduction to their 87,500 person workforce. However, first year termination costs in personnel reductions would severely mitigate against using this method of savings. As a result, depot maintenance/modernization reductions would likely be applied to the $1.5 billion workload planned for commercial contract. Severe maintenance backlogs would develop as well as reduced operating effectiveness of ships and aircraft.

In the areas of base operating support, training and education, the fiscal year 1988 savings available through termination of civil service employees is also largely offset by one-time termination costs. Some savings could result from a hiring freeze and from early retirements. Savings that could be accomplished by furloughing employees might be significant, but this would depend on a determination of the legality of furloughing. Fiscal year 1988 savings available through reduction of various contract civilian support could be significant. Total contract civilian support costs of $1,340.4 million could be reduced by limiting new contracts, not renewing current contracts, and/or canceling existing contracts.

MARINE CORPS

The conferees recommend a reduction of $30.9 million to the Marine Corps operation and maintenance account. Sequestration (Case I) would raise this reduction to approximately $213.0 million. If its O&M accounts were to be protected (Case II), the reduction would be approximately $111.0 million. Under either of these cases, the impact is so severe that the Marine Corps could probably not maintain its present level of force structure without unacceptable degradation to readiness.

Marine Corps unit readiness would decrease as many units go from substantially ready (C-2) to either marginally ready (C-3) or not ready (C-4) due to the inability to train or exercise and the lack of supplies to perform maintenance. Maritime Prepositioning Ships training would be reduced far below the level needed to maintain this program at a proper state of readiness. Reductions in supplies, equipment, and transportation for the Norway propositioning program would delay operational capability by a year or more and could cause NATO allies to doubt U.S. commitment to that program.

Deadlined major end-item equipment would double from 3 to 6 percent. The backlog of maintenance and repair could increase by as much as $80 million, bringing the total backlog to over $400 million. Reductions in system design, development and maintenance, training support, and other headquarters sponsored programs would degrade the quality of overall management and administration in the Marine Corps. Because of many fixed and unavoidable costs, civilian employment reductions would be required, and these would be exacerbated by the need to provide severance pay.

AIR FORCE

The conferees recommend a reduction of $595.1 million to the Air Force operation and maintenance account. Sequestration (Case I) would result in this reduction rising to approximately $3.5 billion. If the O&M accounts were to be protected (Case II), the reduction to the Air Force O&M account would be approximately $2.4 billion. A sequestration would require some combination of the following actions to accommodate the reductions.

As the major driver of Air Force O&M expenditures, some reduction to the flying hour program would be necessary to meet the sequestration levels. The effect of such reductions would be similar in each command: reduced training, lower crew proficiency and a less ready force. For example, if flying hours were reduced by 200,000 hours, and the reduction spread equitably, the Tactical Air Force's share would be 100,000 hours. This is equivalent to the total annual flying hour program for five wings of aircraft plus the entire Alaskan Air Command. The reductions would decrease flying hours per pilot per month from 19.3 to 15.8, the fiscal year 1980 level.

The Strategic Air Command's (SAC) share, under this reduced level, would be 48,000 hours, causing programmed bomber/tanker hours per crew per month to fall from 18 to 14.2. This equates to the annual flying hour program for nine SAC squadrons, is not sufficient to maintain the force at the lowest level of readiness and would severely impact SAC's capability to execute its primary mission.

Similarly, the Military Airlift Command would have to reduce almost 150 qualified crews at these sequestration levels, while undergraduate flying training would be reduced by 200 pilots and 100 navigators.

Civilian personnel is another major account that would have to be reduced under these loser funding levels. Depending on the size of the sequestration, 20,000 to 30,000 workyears would be eliminated through attrition, furlough actions or, if necessary, a reduction-in-force.

Other major areas that would be reduced, with concomitant detrimental effects, are depot maintenance, real property maintenance and contract services. For example, reducing depot maintenance funding by about a half billion dollars would increase current backlogs to over a billion dollars, idling some weapon systems. Real property maintenance could also be reduced by several $100 million by deferring all work except emergency and safety related repairs. However, postponing building maintenance and upkeep only fosters facility deterioration in the long run. Similarly, if contracts for custodial services, grounds maintenance, mess attendants, equipment maintenance, etc. were reduced by several $100 million, these required services would be postponed or accomplished at less efficient rates or higher overall costs.

The sequestration would also severely hamper the Air Force's critical space programs. Reducing space programs by ten percent would stretch out completion of the Consolidated Space Operations Center by one or more years. The lower funding levels would also slow the expansion of the expendable launch vehicle program, which is sorely needed due to the space shuttle disaster, from nine launches to three.

Finally, reducing medical programs by several $100 million would decrease the level of services in the direct care system, leading to a shift in patients to the more expensive CHAMPUS program vitiating the "savings" in the O&M accounts.

GUARD AND RESERVE

The fiscal year 1988 request included $2.9 billion for Reserve forces and $3.8 billion for the Guard components. The conference agreement reduced funding by $31.8 million for the Reserves and increased funding by $28.6 million for the Guard.

Under a sequester (Case I), the Reserve accounts would be reduced by $421 million and Guard forces by $492 million. If the O&M accounts were to be protected (Case II), the Reserve and Guard accounts would be reduced by $271 million and $291 million respectively.

A sequestration would have a substantial effect on the operational readiness and sustainability of both the Reserve and Guard forces. The current policy of shifting additional missions to the non-active duty forces would be terminated because current missions would be trimmed, not expanded. The magnitude of these reductions would not permit the Reserve and Guard to reduce all activities equally; some operations would be terminated.

The severity of the cuts would be greater if the operation and maintenance accounts were not protected, but the areas that would be affected would be similar at both levels. With very little base operating support or real property maintenance funds, reductions must come from flying missions and military technician pay. Flying hours would be reduced by 20 to 30 percent or 30 to 45 percent depending on the sequester level. Guard and Reserve Technicians could be cut by 8,000 to 12,000 workyears.

Cuts of this magnitude would degrade combat capability, flying safety and readiness of existing units. Unit and force modernization efforts scheduled for fiscal year 1988 would be delayed. For example, the Air Force Reserve would have to cancel or stretch out equipping units with C-5, C-141, F-16 and KC-10 aircraft at seven locations. These units would continue to operate older, less capable aircraft, usually with higher operating and maintenance costs. Reserve and Guard units would be forced to alter hiring plans, including delaying filling vacancies, hiring below approved grades, and, in some cases, placing personnel on furlough.

Alternatively, the Guard units could seek additional funds from the state treasuries to maintain force and operational levels. However, in light of current state funding problems, the states are unlikely to fund the shortfalls.

MILITARY PERSONNEL

In order to reach the baseline for military personnel accounts under a sequester, the amount appropriated for military personnel would be limited to $75.431 billion—a $2.060 billion reduction from the $77.491 billion recommended by the conferees.

To minimize the adverse impact on force readiness and maintain the favorable recruiting and retention trends of the recent past, several actions could be taken. For example, a two percent increase in basic pay, basic allowance for quarters, and basic allowance for subsistence for military personnel (instead of the three percent increase in basic pay and basic allowance for subsistence and the six percent increase in basic allowance for quarters recommended by the conferees) effective January 1, 1988, could be implemented. This would represent the same level promulgated by the President for Federal civil servants during fiscal year 1988. In order to effect greater savings in pay and allowances, the effective date of the pay raise could be delayed until April 1, 1988. The total savings from these two actions would be $972 million.
